Weygand's Ambush Traps Nazi Tank Columns, Lines Hold, Paris Says; Germans Raid Britain; Roosevelt Asks Funds to Crush 5th Column

President Bars 'Unsafe' Aliens, Requests Money For 500 G-Men

By William V. Nessly
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt last night ordered into effect new restrictions on entry of aliens into the United States, and asked Congress for $6,558,800 more for the FBI and Immigration Service.

In the drive to forestall fifth column activities here, the Presidential request said it is anticipated that "there will be a great number of prisoners to be handled."

The President decreed that no passport visa or other entry certificate shall be granted to any alien "whose entry would be contrary to the public safety or to an alien who is unable to establish a legitimate purpose or reasonable need" for coming here.

Curb Put on Seamen

He likewise imposed new limitations on alien seamen and greater provision for their proper identification before they are granted shore leave "for any purposes."

The Fifth Column suppression campaign saw these other developments:

The House, without debate, passed a bill providing for prompt deportation of aliens engaged in espionage or sabotage for a foreign government or who have been convicted of a felony.

Formation of a "Home Defense Force" of volunteers between 17 and 21 years of age or above 35, was called for in a bill submitted by Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire.

Proposal for a "National Industrial Defense Corps" came from the Senate Military Affairs Committee and was indorsed at hearings. It would be charged with prevention of sabotage in key defense industries.

Following reports that the FBI was investigating allegations of foreign-sponsored subversive activities among the Nation's Indians, elders of the Navajo tribe, at Gallup, N. M., adopted a resolution assailing such activities and pledging loyalty to the Government with "armed defense if necessary."

Radio Amateurs Curbed

Amateur radio operators were forbidden by the Federal Communications Commission to maintain communication with foreign stations.

House action on the bill to deport Harry Bridges, Australian-born C. I. O. leader on the West Coast, was blocked by parliamentary procedure.

Commander Richard S. Field, director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, warned seamen employed on American merchant vessels to prove their American citizenship or risk being barred from employment by pending legislation. He pointed out that legislation now in Congress would bar from United States vessels both aliens and native-born and naturalized Americans who fail to submit proofs of citizenship.

Assistant Secretary of State A. A. Berle, jr., resigned from the National Lawyers' Guild with the statement "it is obvious that the present management of the guild is not prepared to take any stand Ottawa, June 5.—Thousands of child refugees from Great Britain, France, the Netherlands and other countries invaded by Germany are to be brought to Canada as soon as transport can be arranged.

This announcement was made to Parliament today by T. A. Crerar, minister of resources, as the result of a conference of immigration, health and welfare officials. It portends the greatest child exodus overseas in history.

The movement will be limited only by the need and the transport available. Canada's capacity to receive and absorb these homeless and to give them a safe refuge from the terrors of war is believed to be almost without limit.

Thousands of Canadian mothers already have offered to take another child into their homes, and thousands more only await the call before offering to do so.

[Among the first of the child refugees, International News Service reported from New York, may be the two little Dutch Princesses, Beatrix and Irene, who are reported aboard a Dutch warship en route to

Little Damage Done by Reich Fliers Hunting British Airports

By the Associated Press

London (Thursday), June 6. German bombs fell in rural districts of Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk and Thameside early today as the Nazi air force turned its fury from France to England in the most widespread raids these islands have felt.

Little damage was reported, except for one house set afire, and only six casualties—all slightly injured—were recorded. One German bomber was believed shot down.

Hunting Airdromes

A joint communique from the air ministry and the ministry of home security said German explosive and incendiary bombs were dropped "apparently in an effort to locate and attack R. A. F. airdromes."

At several places along the east and southeast coast there were sounds of terrific explosions.

Beds were shaken and windows rattled at one point, and searchlights and the bursting of shells of antiaircraft were visible at several points.

The searchlight display in the direction of the Humber (Lincolnshire) was described as the biggest there since the outbreak of the war.

On the east coast where the bomber was believed brought down searchlights lighted the sky and British pursuiters hunted the raiders for more than an hour.

Yesterday the German raiders had struck at central and northwestern France on the heels of Allied raids on the Rhine Valley from the Swiss border to the Netherlands.

The French reported their aviation yesterday morning attacked German factories at Munich, Ludwigshafen, Ulm, and Mannheim. Great fires were started and several airdomes were hit. The DMW airplane motor factory near Munich was bombed for the second time.

R. A. F. Strikes Again

In the bombing of Friederichshafen, the home of the Zeppelin, six bombs were dropped on the Swiss side of the border, apparently inadvertently, but there were no casualties.

British bombers set tremendous fires in oil storage plants and wrecked rail communications in northwest Germany Monday night, striking at such cities as Frankfort, Dusseldorf, Cologne and Essen, the British air ministry announced.

[The German radio said a number of incendiary bombs dropped on Cologne damaged apartment houses. There were no injuries.

Alarm in Paris

[Incendiary and explosive bombs were dropped in the Wesseling district of the city where a shed and stable were set on fire. The English crew of four of a bomber shot

Poilus Pushed Back in Drive On Paris, Havre, Germans Claim

By Percival Knauth
Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, June 5.—Attacking along the entire southern front from Abbeville to Sedan, Adolf Hitler's armies at dawn this morning launched their second great offensive in the west, the announced objective of which is the annihilation of France's fighting forces.

Between Abbeville and Ham, 50 miles east, the Somme has been crossed, the high command reports tonight. To the southeast the Oise-Aisne Canal is likewise already in the rear of the advancing German troops. Rheims, less than 25 miles away, is immediately threatened by the German left wing, while further west Rouen and Le Havre, some 95 miles south of the Somme, appear to be the first objectives of the German right.

The attack was simultaneous along the entire 200-mile front. The main German drive is expected to head down along the Channel coast, cutting off France still further from her ally, England, and placing the Germnas in possession of new bases against the "arch enemy" across the water. But with the entire front in action, it is yet too early to tell the finer details of the strategic plan.

Report Line Broken

German troops, it was stated authoritatively tonight, are heading southward with their right wing advancing on the Channel coast. The center and left are thereby headed toward Paris, with the extreme left directed south of the capital. The present bulge is general along the entire front, but this is only the momentary situation at the beginning of the offensive. The "Weygand Line" facing the Germans is already reported broken at several points by the first German spearheads.

It is emphasized in Berlin tonight that the offensive just launched will be a war of movement from the start. This time, it is stated, there are no fortifications to be overcome; air supremacy is already won and the enemy's rear is already seriously disorganized. Swift advances of Germany motorized spearheads are expected from the beginning.

Attempted local advances by the French at Abbeville and Longwy, the extreme west and east flanks of the front, yesterday were repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy, the high command reported today.

Nazi Plan Flexible

The armies which Hitler is throwing against the French today are rested from the Flanders battle and strengthened with new untried divisions. Hitler, in his order of the day, stated they were "about to face the enemy and defeat him" for the first time. Since the Germans first broke through the Maginot Line extension between Valenciennes and Montmedy more than two weeks ago with these troops, their equipment has been pouring in a steady stream through Belgium

The War Today . . .

FRESH GERMAN TROOPS, hurling themselves forward in Adolf Hitler's second great western offensive, have penetrated France's Somme-Aisne line at several points along a 125-mile front, but French and Germans disagree on the tactical advantages of the initial Nazi successes.

THE FRENCH claimed the Nazi tanks, filtering through French advance positions softened by artillery and infantry attacks in World War style, were caught in Generalissimo Weygand's "elastic" defense system. Elsewhere French lines were firm, Paris said.

THE GERMANS SAID these penetrations were the beginning of the spear-head break-throughs, which they said were aimed at Le Havre on the coast and at Paris.

BOTH SIDES AGREED the Germans' main drives were in the region of Amiens, 35 miles from the Somme mouth, aimed southwest at Rouen and Le Havre; in the Ham region, 40 miles farther east, aimed probably at Paris down the west side of the Oise; and just north of Soissons, aimed probably down the east side of the Oise, to pinch Paris with the Ham push. The rest of the front, eastward 75 miles to the Maginot Line, was active, but without developments.

Reynaud Ousts Daladier From Cabinet

French Premier Takes Over Foreign Ministry in Shakeup

By the Associated Press

Paris (Thursday), June 6.—Premier Reynaud in his second cabinet shakeup in less than a month today assumed personal charge of the Foreign Ministry as well as the War Ministry, and the premiership in a move to strengthen his hand against German armies driving against Paris from the north.

Edouard Daladier, whom he succeeded as premier on March 21, and later made foreign minister in the cabinet shuffle of May 18, was dropped from the government.

A brief communique issued early this morning after a six-hour cabinet session with President Lebrun informed Frenchmen that the man whose energy and frankness in one of France's great historical crises has won praise, had become a one-man director of the war.

"The premier becomes minister of foreign affairs at the same time as minister of national defense, these two ministries assuring the conduct of the war," the communique said.

Paul Baudouin, secretary of the administrative staff of the economic warfare committee and president of the Bank of Indo-China, was appointed assistant to Reynaud in the foreign ministry.

Guns Hidden Behind Line Mop Up Armored Horde; Two Million Men Locked On Front of 125 Miles

By the Associated Press

Paris, June 5.—German armored columns broke into the main French front on the Somme as the spear-points of a great offensive, but were declared tonight to have been entrapped in a new system of defense created by Generalissimo Maxime Weygand for the supreme stand to save Paris.

Not one of the tanks, military dispatches said, got all the way through the network of defenses.

At the same time, authorized sources asserted that the savage new Nazi offensive had been checked generally all along the battle line. French infantry and artillery, they added, were holding firm against machines.

The Nazi tanks advanced through open spaces in the French defenses only to meet successive French "support points" like field fortifications, of a new design.

The first points, armed with machine guns, were erected on the banks of the numerous canals and streams forming the battle front. Back of them were gun nests at cross roads in the fortified villages and on the hills.

Finished Off by Guns Hidden in Woods

Then, military informants said, the line ended in deep woods where any German units which succeeded in breaking through to those points were slowed down and finally halted by guns hidden in the shadows.

A spokesman thus summed up the French position at the end of this first day of the great battle:

"Favorable."

The German offensive spread in the three main sectors of Amiens, Peronne and Laon, and the Nazis strove to drive converging spearheads toward Paris.

It was in these sectors that the new system of Generalissimo Maxime Weygand was put into action for the first time. The Maginot theory of fixed fortified positions was dropped and new defenses were designed to absorb and break up tank attacks gradually.

French military dispatches said virtually all of Weygand's support points held out during the day. French troops closed in behind the entrapped mechanized units to counterattack from the rear.

These new defenses were compared by military authorities to those of the middle ages when archers protected themselves behind staggered lines of posts against charges of armor-clad cavalry and overcame the enemy with their arrows.

These declarations that the armored advance units had pushed through only to face destruction came almost simultaneously with broadcast German claims that "countless new divisions" had smashed the main Weygand defense lines in two thrusts.

French Hurl U. S. Bombers Into Fray

Along with their reply to the German tanks the Allies threw their own air forces full-out into the battle. French bombers, attacking in the Peronne, St. Quentin and Cambrai sectors, destroyed a railroad station and several German convoys and dropped more than six tons of explosives on German troops in the St. Quentin area alone.

Light French bombers, some recently bought from America, dropped 15 tons in the Peronne sector after fighting off German pursuit planes. Many German planes were reported brought down in aerial battle but no figures were given.

Earlier, authorized sources had declared the Somme front was holding everywhere with the exception of a few points where a fall-back to more favorable positions was indicated, adding that in such an operation there was "nothing to worry about."

The German steel-clad cars were attacking in great fleets at many points along the front. Nearly 2,000,000 men were at grips.

It was a struggle to death or decision on a 125-mile-long front red with the fire of uncounted thousands of guns—a chaos of roaring artillery, bombers, tanks and infantry action.

The worst of it all was in a bloody rectangle formed by the cities of Le Fere, Laon, Anizy-le-Chateau and Chauny.

The Nazis centered the sharpest of their efforts in the two sectors of Amien and Laon, with a supporting attack all along the front—running east from the mouth of the Somme to the Aisne River—lashing out from a pocket they had held on the south side of the Somme at Amiens and down the Oise Valley on the highway from Laon to Soissons.

Poilus Stand Alone on 125-Mile Front

It was a battlefield of the last war; and a battlefield where men had died in combat through the centuries.

And while Adolf Hitler was threatening to teach France a "historic lesson," Premier Reynaud thus answered him:

"We will fight to the end with our British ally for the liberty of the world."

Nevertheless, France stood virtually alone on this new and decisive front for the time being, because of the disaster to British arms in Flanders.

The attack toward Paris, for which the Nazis long had hungered and for which they had prepared by cleaning the Allied troops out of Flanders with heavy losses, began at dawn and roared on through the hot, dusty day and into the night without letup.

The Germans stormed up first with their dive bombers and heavy artillery, smashing at the massed French infantry. Then the Nazi foot soldiers poured forward in waves, while mechanized columns waited for openings in the French line to start their lightning dashes.

This beginning of the offensive thus was in the classic tradition—artillery preparation followed by infantry attack as it was done during the World War. The new element was the use of dive bombers in the

Latin-American Nazis May Act

Official Circles Fear German Victory May Cause Uprising

By John G. Norris

Serious prospect of Nazi uprisings in Latin America should Germany win a quick victory over the Allies worried official circles last night as Congress prepared to take a firm stand against any totalitarian inroads in the Western Hemisphere.

Confidential reports reaching this Government, it was stated authoritatively, indicate that a burst of Nazi agitation may be expected in the event the German drive on Paris is successful. These sources revealed that Berlin is making deliveries of field guns, machine guns and other military equipment to Brazil, despite the great demands of her own army.

Meanwhile, Gen. George C. Marshall proposed enlargement of the regular Army to 400,000 men as a step which might make a mobilization of the National Guard unnecessary in case trouble arises this year in the Western Hemisphere.

At the same time, Army officials revealed plans to organize one of

More Incomes Face Taxation

House Committee Proposes to Lower Exemption Scale

By John B. Oakes

Addition of 2,050,000 taxpayers to the Federal income tax rolls was "tentatively" decided upon yesterday by the House Ways and Means Subcommittee drafting the emergency national defense revenue bill.

Under the proposal tax exemptions for married persons are lowered to $2,000 from the present level of $2,500, and on single individuals to $800 from $1,000.

Chairman Cooper of the tax subcommittee estimated that broadening of the tax base in this way would bring in $75,000,000 in additional revenue, of which $14,000,000 would come from the new taxpayers.

Explaining that lowering of the exemptions would have its effect "all the way up through the rate schedule," Representative Cooper said the remaining increased yield of $61,000,000 would be paid in additional taxes by persons already

Wife Is Killed As She Intervenes In Argument

A Fairfax County wife's attempt to intervene in an argument between her husband and two neighbors ended in her being fatally wounded by the husband's gun, it was revealed yesterday, when Coroner T. B. McCord issued a certificate of accidental death.

Victim of the bullet was Mrs. Mary Frances Yowell, 66, wife of William N. Yowell, 65, who operates a filling station about four miles west of Fairfax on Lee Highway.

According to Sheriff E. P. Kirby, the shooting occurred Tuesday evening at the filling station following a controversy between the neighbors and Yowell earlier in the day. When the neighbors appeared at the Yowell home that evening, the gas station owner got a pistol and ordered them to leave his property. Mrs. Yowell attempted to stop him as he started out the front door, and the gun was accidentally discharged. A bullet pierced the woman's lung, mortally wounding her.

Deal Reported to Send Allies U. S. World War Guns

By Frank L. Kluckhohn
Copyright by New York Times

The United States will make available at once to the Allies vast stocks of World War rifles, field guns and ammunition, it was learned yesterday. The way for immediate sale of part of the stocks held by the Army was cleared by a ruling just made by Robert H. Jackson, the Attorney General, who held that the arms could be transferred without violation of international law.

The Army has on hand more than 2,000,000 World War Enfield and Springfield rifles with considerable ammunition for them, and about 5,000 field guns of 75 millimeter caliber with plenty of ammunition. While it is understood that only part of these "obsolete" stores will be made available to Great Britain and France it is reported that at least 600,000 rifles and 2,500 field guns, with ammunition, are included in the program.

While this equipment is regarded as unsatisfactory for the use of this country's Army which is rapidly being modernized, it would permit the British to compensate in part for the losses of equipment the B. E. F. suffered in Flanders. Although old, the rifles and guns are usable. Most of the supplies, it is said in official quarters here, will go to the British.

The Justice and the War departments refused to comment upon the Attorney General's ruling. It is

Hidden Gold

D. C. Man Wins Back 'Illegal' Riches That Vanished in Bank

Leroy Abbott, of 1438 Meridian place northwest, was awarded $50,500 by a jury yesterday after:

Having had $50,000 for ten years and not knowing it.

"Finding" it, but being unable to spend it because it was "illegal."

Putting it in a bank, where, he said, it disappeared.

According to the Associated Press, the verdict was given by a Circuit Court jury in Westminster, Md., against the Takoma Park Bank.

Abbott, until 1936 a filling station operator, gave this testimony:

His aunt, Mrs. Cagline Points, of Washington, left him an envelope in 1926, saying it might be "of importance later on in life." She often gave him envelopes containing advice, so he filed that one in his papers.

Opening it in 1936, he found 50 $1,000 gold certificates. Such certificates, however, had been called in by the Government in 1933.

Abbott put the certificates and ten $100 bills (part of the money from the sale of his filling station) in a safe deposit box at the Takoma Park Bank on August 17, 1938, and later withdrew five of the $100 bills.

On December 14, 1937, he said, he found the box and its contents gone, and brought suit.

Bank attorneys argued that the gold certificates were illegal currency at the time, and Abbott had no property right in them. The court, however, ruled against them.

There was no indication whether the Government would take any action against Abbott for possessing the gold certificates.

THE TROJAN HORSELAUGH

(A Fifth Columnist plans his day while shaving and waxing his mustache.)

Ach, nobody knows what troubles a Fifth Columnist has got . . . Those wise guys think it's all fun and excitement like blowing up powder plants . . . But it's the little things that count, like throwing a dead cat in a reservoir or making fun of democracy at a cocktail party.

Harlan Miller

Let me see . . . At breakfast I must ask the waiter if Roosevelt will send his son to the trenches . . . Right away I must write a letter to the paper calling William Allen White a warmonger . . . And I shall ask the taxi driver if he wants to fight for King George.

* * * *

Today my quota of anonymous letters denouncing pro-Ally columnists is ten . . . And I must sign a petition with 100 names to the White House denouncing the sale of airplanes to France . . . With the Irish cop I'll joke about how funny it is if Hitler invades England by way of Ireland; no, Eire.

* * * *

If I could only do something big, like yelling fire in a Belgian relief mass-meeting . . . But I can send to the preacher some articles about the Polish atrocities against the Germans . . . And I'll mail out five pictures of Der Fuehrer kissing a baby. . . . I must call President Conant of Harvard a warmonger, too.

"—dead cat in the reservoir"

At lunch at the club it will be well if I say learnedly that with Europe it's just power politics, better we stay out . . . That impresses 'em . . . If I run into one of those sidewalk broadcasts maybe I can yell "Heil Hitler!" into the mike. . . . Also, I must call Senator Austin a warmonger.

* * * *

Also I must dictate letters to all our Congressmen complaining about so much money for defense, where's all the money going? . . . And I must send in ten names today to the German Library of Information to be sent the Facts in Review Magazine, so sweet about Der Fuehrer . . . And I must call Senator King a warmonger.

* * * *

Today I mustn't forget to tell all the Protestants I know it's a shame America sends an envoy to the Pope . . . And the Catholics I must tell it's a shame the way Roosevelt won't let Farley be President . . . Must make some wisecrack in the elevator about Corcoran & Cohen, too . . . Gen. Pershing, too, I'd better call a warmonger.

When the parachutists come I can show 'em where to dynamite the pumping station and the phone exchange. Ach, what if they never come? But now I can leave always the water running and leave the telephones off the hook, maybe it causes a little trouble . . . It's a good idea to call Nicholas Murray Butler a warmonger also.

"—where to throw a monkey-wrench"

Yes, and I must write an indignant letter to Senator Byrnes for calling Lindy the Lone Ostrich . . . Soon I need to learn more about machinery so I'll know where to throw the monkeywrench . . . Could I have the nerve to ask the orchestra to play the Horst Wessel song in a night club? . . . Have I remembered to call Roosevelt a warmonger?

* * * *

If I drop into a radio forum maybe I can get near a microphone and heckle the patriots about war profits and maybe call Hull a warmonger . . . It's time I send over more lists of Americans with relatives in Europe who might be persuaded to help the cause.

* * * *

It's time I send another $100 to to the Pagan Front or the Aluminum Shirts and collect $200 on my expense account . . . If I could only arrange to make a speech in the high school how mean the British were at Bunker Hill . . . I must call Wendell Willkie a warmonger before I go to bed.

Roosevelt Sure of Nomination If He Says 'Yes,' Leaders Hold

Party Chiefs Deny President Ever Has Committed Himself

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Responsible Democratic leaders declared yesterday that the President never actually has committed himself to seek a third term and never has put his finger on the man he wants to run with him.

Off-the-record opinions of Democratic leaders were solicited as the President's delayed announcement and the international crisis piled up a record crop of Washington political rumors.

A canvass of key legislators frequently intimately consulted by the President disclosed no direct knowledge of Mr. Roosevelt's intentions and a unanimous belief that he has told no one in so many words what he definitely intends to do.

The men he would be most likely to tell voiced almost to a man the conviction that he would be nominated and would acquiesce in the "draft." But they, and no one else to their knowledge, have ever had any flat word from the President to this effect. So far as a commitment of the President's intentions is concerned, they are as much in the dark as before the third-term movement rolled up a majority of convention delegates.

The draft drive, gaining such momentum that many believe the President could not resist it if he wished, meanwhile picked up its most influential conservative recruit—Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi.

Harrison, as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, has differed with the president frequently on tax and other matters in the past, and missed being his Senate leader by one vote only after the President's intervention. He now sees eye to eye with the White House on taxes, defense and foreign policy and has been one of Mr. Roosevelt's legislative pillars in the present session.

Harrison wired Herbert Holmes, chairman of the Mississippi Democratic Executive Committee, to "voice to the State Democratic convention Tuesday my hope that the democracy of Mississippi will unanimously indorse President Roosevelt for renomination."

"The Nation is now confronted with grave international and domestic programs," telegraphed Harrison. "In times of such great emergency precedents can be broken; and because of his thorough grasp of the international situation, his masterful handling of our foreign affairs from the beginning of the present world crisis and the accomplishments of his Administration, I believe it imperative that the President be reelected.

"It is my opinion that there will be no contest over his nomination in the coming national convention and that in the general election he will be overwhelmingly reelected."

Blueprints have been drawn for a convention built around the third-term theme; arguments supporting a third-term nomination have been reduced to writing; but the President has yet to sign and seal them.

Delay in Postmaster General Farley's summoning of the Democratic arrangements committee to select a convention permanent chairman and keynoter was regarded as significant.

Farley is expected to move only after the President definitely decides what to do and whom he want in the dominant convention roles. As in 1936, the President is expected to specify just what he wants in the platform. If he runs he will certainly pick his running mate.

Indications were that neither Farley, the men who will write the platform or prospective vice presidential candidates have been given the go-ahead signal.

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, who cruised with the President on the Potomac last week-end, passed another day denying reports that the President asked him to run for Vice President. Byrnes, who incidentally shares the opinion that the President has told no one what he intends to do, reiterated:

"I am not a candidate for Vice President and I didn't discuss that with the President. We didn't talk politics."

Byrnes often has been mentioned for the important keynoter role, but would be ruled out for that post were he a candidate for Vice President. It has been assumed that Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, would again head the resolutions committee. Friends said he is not seeking the post.

On the Republican front Senator Taft, of Ohio, still claiming a deleon the rolls. He emphasized that the subcommittee's decisions yesterday were all "tentative."

On top of the estimated $75,000,000 gate lead over New York District Attorney Dewey, announced plans for a week-end speaking trip through the South.

Accompanied by his wife, Senator Taft willl address a luncheon in Knoxville Friday, a Chattanooga dinner Friday night, a dinner at Atlanta Saturday night and a dinner in Birmingham Monday night.

The Republicna National Committee said four other Republican leaders in the next few days will step to the microphones "to tell the country of the Republican position on national defense."

Former Assistant Secretary of War Hanford MacNider will speak tonight; Senator Bridges, of New Hampshire, Friday night; New York District Attorney Dewey Saturday night, and Representative Thomas, of New Jersey, Sunday night.

HONORED AT LUNCHEON—The Calvert Club, composed of Catholic business and professional men, yesterday gave a testimonial luncheon to John Saul, recognizing his elevation to knight commander, civil class, Order of St. Gregory the Great. He is shown with the Most Rev. John M. McNamara, auxiliary bishop of Washington

John Saul squirmed uncomfortably under praise from speakers and telegram-writers yesterday at a testimonial luncheon recognizing his elevation to knight commander, civil class, Order of St. Gregory the Great.

"He has the spirit of the best of knights of ancient years," said the Most Rev. John M. McNamara, auxiliary bishop of Washington.

"A great son of a great father," said Henry I. Quinn, speaking for the Catholic laity of Washington.

The luncheon was given at Willard Hotel by the Calvert Club, composed of Catholic business and professional men. William Joseph Neale, president, introduced James E. Colliflower, president of the Washington Board of Trade, who presented Bishop McNamara and Quinn.

Telegrams and letters of praise, expressing regret at not being able to attend, were received from the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore and Washington, who recommended Saul's knighthood to the Pope; the Most Rev. Joseph M. Corrigan, rector of Catholic University; the Rev. Arthur A. One hundred and twenty-five attended the testimonial. Saul is executive vice president of the American Security and Trust Co.

2,050,000 More Incomes Face Tax

from broadening the base, a projected 10 per cent "super tax" would bring in another $7,500,000.

As a complement to the broadening of the tax base, the subcommittee is expected at a meeting this morning to work out a new schedule of surtax rates on incomes between $3,000 and $60,000. At present, surtaxes begin at $4,000, but it is thought probable that this limit would be lowered.

Total yield of the new income tax schedules being drafted by the committee is set for $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 a year, which would be in addition to the $656,000,000 already projected in the Doughton bill introduced last week.

The new income rates now under consideration in the subcommittee are planned as permanent revisions of the tax schedule, and would form Title III of the Doughton bill. The other levies in this bill—including increased excises on such commodities as gasoline and cigarettes, and a 10 per cent "super tax" on all individual and corporate incomes—are projected only for the next five years.

The entire tax measure, designed to yield about $1,000,000,000 annually for the next five years, is intended to amortize the $4,000,000,000 in national defense securities which the bill authorizes the Treasury to issue beyond the existing $45,000,000,000 debt limit.

Block Would Have Hoover Run Again

New York, June 6 (AP).—Paul Block, newspaper publisher, yesterday indorsed former President Herbert Hoover for the Republican Presidential nomination this year.

In an editorial which appeared in his newspapers, including the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette and the Toledo Blade, Block declared:

"There are a number of outstanding Americans who could do the job well. But the question is not only who could do it well, but who could do it best under world conditions of the present and immediate future. If favoritism and prejudice are to be forgotten, as they should be in such dark days as may lie ahead of us, and if a thorough understanding of foreign and domestic situations is paramount, then the choice of the Republican Party for its Presidential candidate ought to be Herbert Hoover."

Jeannette Rankin Again Seeks Seat

Helena, Mont., June 5 (AP).—Jeanette Rankin, first woman ever elected to Congress, filed for the Republican nomination from the First Montana District today and took as her slogan: "Prepare to the limit for defense; keep our men out of Europe."

During a previous term in Congress, she voted against American participation in the World War in 1917.

Labor Peace Moves Made On Two Fronts

Ladies Garment Workers Union Rejoins A. F. L.

The C. I. O. executive board, closing a three-day session here, yesterday voted unanimously to continue the life of its peace committee to effect a settlement of the labor split with the A. F. of L.

President John L. Lewis of the C. I. O. declared later, however, at a press conference, that he did not think there was any chance for resuming the negotiations that were interrupted several months ago.

The stand was announced at about the same time the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, under the presidency of David Dubinsky, long an advocate of labor reunion, was voting at New York to reaffiliate with the A. F. of L.

Lewis' Statement

Lewis' statement came after the board had voted that "he present to the Nation through the press the position and attitude of the Congress of Industrial Organizations on this matter."

That attitude, as outlined by Lewis yesterday, was that the C. I. O. stood ready at any time to resume negotiations with leaders of the labor group led by William Green. The C. I. O. peace committee is composed of Lewis and Vice Presidents Hillman and Murray.

Hillman recently appointed to the President's Defense Commission, was not present because of illness, but Lewis disclosed that Jacob Potofsky, who represents Hillman's union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, on the board, had voted in favor of the peace resolution.

At its recent convention in New York, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers voted in favor of reopening negotiations with the A. F. L.

Specifically, Lewis yesterday renewed his suggestion of February 10 that heads of A. F. L. and C. I. O. unions meet in Constitution Hall to settle peace terms. "That formula will bring immediate peace to American labor," Lewis said, but suggested no date for the meeting.

Back Into A. F. of L.

New York, June 5 (AP).—The twice-orphaned International Ladies Garment Workers Union—it was disowned by the American Federation of Labor for joining the C. I. O. and subsequently cut its ties with the latter—voted overwhelmingly today to reunite its 250,000 members with the A. F. of L.

By this action, approved by a 640-to-12 vote of the delegates to the fortieth anniversary convention, the union again bespoke its disapproval of the C. I. O.'s setting up a permanent organization to rival the A. F. of L. and put added pressure on both parent groups to end their estrangement.

No sooner was the result announced than the union's president, David Dubinsky, spoke of A. F. of L.-C. I. O. peace. Prospects were considerably brighter now than previously, he said, adding that William Green, A. F. of L. president, told him recently that the federation "was ready to go further than ever before."

Billion-Dollar Relief Bill Before Senate

Quarter of WPA Funds for Defense, Says Harrington

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

A billion-dollar 1941 relief bill peppered with national defense items was reported to the Senate yesterday by the Appropriations Committee, as Works Projects Administrator Harrington predicted that one-fourth of WPA funds next year would be used in the preparedness drive.

The measure retains the House-approved proposal of President Roosevelt that the WPA be granted $975,650,000 to be spent in the first eight months of the fiscal year if necessary.

And it subjects the House bill to numerous changes such as:

Abolishing the limitation on WPA employment during the months from July to November—a House provision which was widely interpreted as designed to balk alleged efforts to increase WPA rolls during the election campaign;

Increasing the grant for President Roosevelt's office of Government reports from the $500,000 allowed in the House to the $830,000 given the agency for the current year;

Removing the prohibition against WPA theater projects; and

Raising the limitation on Federal expenditures for WPA buildings from $50,000 to $100,000, and applying this restriction only to "buildings" instead of to all structures.

The numerous national defense items added to the bill by the Senate committee include:

Provision for training of CCC enrolees in "noncombatant subjects essential to the operations of the military and naval establishments," and which would contribute to the interests of national defense. This program would not involve military drill of any sort, but would envisage schooling in first aid, photography, operation of motor cars, bridge and road construction, and cooking;

Earmarking of $25,000,000 for WPA construction of Army or Navy approved projects "important to the national defense," with a special provision exempting these projects from the normal 25 per cent local sopnsorship requirement;

Authorization to use relief funds for manual training for national defense industries, and

Exemption from the $100,000 limitation on Federal buildings in the case of projects valuable for national defense.

Col. Harrington said in an interview that approximately 500,000 WPA workers will be employed on national defense projects costing $250,000,000 next year, including airports, roads and armories. Some of the work will be done at Bolling Field, he indicated.

"I consider the WPA a second line in the national defense preparedness drive, and I intend to use it in that way, with the qualification that we not lose sight of our primary purpose—providing employment for the unemployed," said Col. Harrington. He added that in the last five years WPA has accounted for 85 per cent of all airport construction in the country.

House Agrees to Conference Report on District Budget

Effort to Restore Ban on Nonresidents In Schools Is Beaten

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

The House yesterday adopted the conference report on the District supply bill, but only after an unexpected row over free schooling of nonresident pupils.

At the same time, it was disclosed that the total of the 1941 appropriations is $48,765,080 instead of slightly more than $49,000,000, as had been reported previously through a clerical error. This recalculation also showed that the Senate additions to the House bill had been cut by $932,810 instead of $682,810.

Representative Stefan (Republican), Nebraska, raised the objection to the proposed House concurrence in the Senate amendments striking out a House ban on further free schooling for nonresident pupils of suburban Maryland and Virginia. Other Republicans joined in the protest until a roll call was forced. The Senate action was approved, however, 271 to 111.

Because of a parliamentary confusion over the two amendments, Stefan actually forced the roll call upon an innocuous Senate amendment to which he said he had no objection.

Blocked by Glass

This amendment specifies that children of officers of the Army, Navy or Marine Corps or of other Government employes shall not be charged tuition by Washington public schools.

Under previous law, children of all persons working in the District, whether for the Government or in private employment, may send their children to Washington public schools without cost regardless of their residence. School officials estimate that about 2,800 are enrolled and that their education costs the District $265,000 annually.

The House for several years has sought to stop the practice, but each year Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, has had the prohibition eliminated from the District bill. He is chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Stefan complained that the residents of Maryland and Virginia are taking advantage of District taxpayers and pointed out that other States have an interest in the controversy.

Rich Joins in Debate

"Taxpayers of your State and mine have $6,000,000 invested in this bill," he said with reference to the Federal payment.

Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, interjected that Government employes move to suburban Maryland and Virginia "to escape District taxes."

Mild protests were made by Representative Cole (Democrat), of Maryland, and Bland (Democrat), of Virginia, as the Maryland members congregated to resist Stefan's objections.

Representative Caldwell (Democrat), of Florida, who was in charge of the bill, admitted that the nonresident privilege is "an imposition on the District," but he said that the House conferees had been unable to overcome the position of the Senate. He expressed a hope that the House would prevail in future efforts.

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, said he will call up the conference report in the Senate today at the first opportunity. No opposition is anticipated.

As finally calculated, the District bill is $844,338 under budget estimates and $895,873 in excess of the 1940 appropriations. It is $475,363 above the original House figure.

Almost Every Letter Starts Out 'My Dad Is Best in World'

When those judges get together next week to select Washington's Father No. 1 from the stacks of nominations which are being sent to The Post, they are going to have a shrder pob than a fat lady trying to decide which piece of French pastry she wants.

Virtually all of the boys and girls, from 6 to 60, who have filed their choices so far with the Father's Day editor start out the same way:

"I think my dad is the best in the world."

Since each and every one of them is right, the judges' task will be no easy one.

Following are excerpts from some of the letters: "Our father is the father of over 100 daughters—what's this?—all between the ages of 13 and 20. This sounds rather fantastic but it is very true. This time next year his daughters will number very near to 600.

"Dad is the guardian of Bethel No. 4, Order of Job's Daughters of Washington, D. C. Next June he will become associate grand guardian of the order. Everyone of his daughters loves him dearly and we are positive that you would too if you knew him. He is Mr. Karl Plitt, Chevy Chase, Md."

Neatly printed in pencil by eight-year-old Joan Johns is the nomination of her daddy, Brooke, "who tops them all for being a real father every day in the year."

"There are six of us kids," says Joan. "He spends every day showing us a good time. We have all kinds of toys, ponies and all kinds of livestock on the farm (in Ashton, Md.).

"When we kids get bad and worry him, in place of giving us the switch he ends up with kisses."

Another father is eulogized because "he is always happy and a regular sport" and likes to play "Beer Barrel Polka" on the harmonica.

There is pathos in several of the nominations. For example, that of the father "who has been both father and mother to us nine children. My mother has been sick for 15 years. She has been in a sanatorium for the last 14 years."

And the letter from two brothers and a sister who lost their mother on Christmas Day, 1938. Their home kept intact, because father "works and also does a good part of the housework. He cooks, washes dishes, scrubs floors, helps us with our homework, gives us spending money, buys our clothes and is our only guide to tell us right from wrong."

It's too bad that there isn't room enough to quote more excerpts. Every letter, whether published in part or not, will be turned over to the judges. So keep them coming, addressing your nominations to the Father's Day Editor, Washington Post. Deadline is June 12 and the winning entry will be announced on Father's Day, June 16.

Byrd to Offer 10% Economy Program as Tax Amendment

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, said yesterday that he would seek Congressional action on a 10 per cent economy program in nondefense work of the Federal Government despite the President's similar program.

Senator Byrd indicated that his economy program would go further than the President's although both set a 10 per cent goal, for trimming expenses.

The President's list of expenses which he said could not be cut included public works. Senator Byrd said he thought that public works could be cut to some extent. The President's economy goal is between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000. Senator Byrd's is around $500,000,000.

No Desire to Cut Salaries

Senator Byrd said he planned to push his program through an amendment to the tax bill, instead of the relief bill as originally planned. Reason for the change, he said, was that the tax bill was planned to raise more money for defense, his amendment is designed to save more for the same purpose.

He said that he had no desire to see salaries cut unless that were essential to reach the 10 per cent economy. His amendment would provide, he said, that if any Government salaries are to be cut, those of Congressmen would be the first.

Officials of one Government department said yesterday that salary reductions would be the only means of saving 10 per cent. The Justice Department, officials said, uses about 70 per cent of its appropriation for salaries. Besides the FBI, which is listed among defense agencies, the bulk of the Department's work load, it was pointed out, goes to prison administration and handling of legal cases.

Union Chief Protests

In the Labor, Interior, and Commerce departments, officials said that cuts would be made where necessary, but that no plan for them had been worked out. The President's economy program will be directed through the Budget Bureau, which is starting a detailed study of appropriations to find where an average of 1 per cent can be shaved from expenses.

One employe organization yesterday protested Byrd's program. Jacob Baker, president of the United Federal Workers, said the plan was aimed at underpaid employes "who were the chief sufferers when prices boomed during the last war." He said that if the plan went through there would be other legislative attempts "to knock down the country's standard of living and water labor's established rights."

Senator Byrd said the savings could be obtained by eliminating "waste and extravagance" rather than salary cuts.

Out of its reorganization uproar, the Civil Aeronautics Authority turned up this week with a brand-new museum piece. Three months ago the division of research and information finished drawing a large organization chart, about 4 feet by 5, with names and office numbers of key officials, and sent it away to be framed. Two reorganization orders rocked the agency and the chart was forgotten. Now it's back, under glass and framed, to be used—until June 30.

Jobs—Civil service exams have been opened for explosives chemists in four grades, with salaries from $2,600 to $4,600.

No jobs—Civil service exams will remain closed for some time to clerical employes, stenographers and typists, officials said yesterday. More than 6,000 stenographers and 16,000 typists are on the lists for appointment, and a recent examination for male stenographer and typist is expected to produce several thousand additional eligibles.

Chamberlain Blamed for 'Disaster' In Flanders; Ouster From Cabinet Urged

Beaverbrook Urges Speedup in Output Of Aircraft

By the United Press

London, June 5.—There were increasing demands tonight that Neville Chamberlain, "apostle of appeasement," and others long associated with him be thrown out of the war cabinet as responsible for the "colossal military disaster" which the Allies suffered in Flanders.

Although Britain hurriedly was reorganizing its shattered expeditionary force, military experts said it was up to the main French army to hold off the new German offensive.

Lord Beaverbrook, minister of aircraft production, appealed to all aircraft workers to speed up the output of planes for "the production you pour from your factories this week will be hurled into the desperate struggle next week."

He declared that pilots are waiting for the planes and "we must not fail them" in this hour when Britain stands or falls on its own resources.

It was forecast that as result of a secret session of the House of Commons, to be held probably next Tuesday, Chamberlain might be forced from his war cabinet post of Lord President of the Council and chairman of the cabinet steering committee, and that others might go with him.

Important holdovers from Chamberlain's cabinet include Sir Kingsley Wood, chancellor of the exchequer; Lord Halifax, foreign secretary; Anthony Eden, war secretary; Sir Andrew Duncan, president of the board of trade, and Sir John Simon, lord chancellor.

Both the Liberal party organ, News Chronicle, and the Labor party organ, Daily Herald, demanded today that the "umbrella wielders" in the cabinet go out entirely.

Battle Details Guarded

Copyright by New York Times

London, June 5.—The war office guarded carefully all details of the great battle being waged on the Somme tonight, but an official spokesman said the German advance started minus between 400,000 and 500,000 Nazi soldiers who the British estimate were killed in the drive toward the Channel ports.

In the Flanders battle, too, it was officially stated, that the Germans lost between one-third to one-half of the ten armored divisions engaged.

Official British reports from France indicate the Nazis concentrated tanks in the vicinity of Amiens though at some distance from the town. At the same time it is admitted that the Germans managed to get "certain elements" below the Somme near Amiens.

Speed is apparently the key to the new German action. There is evidence here that German tanks have not yet advanced in anything like sufficient numbers to replace the men and machines lost in Flanders, but Chancellor Hitler evidently decided to strike before Gen. Maxime Weygand, Allied commander in chief, could perfect at leisure his defenses along the Somme and before the British could rally and reequip the British expeditionary force.

In one vital respect the Somme battle differs from the battle for the channel ports. The Germans must now fight with the Royal Air Force at its back. This may prove a great handicap to the Nazis.

Official British estimates of German strength during the attack on the Low Countries gives some idea of the tremendous power Herr Hitler is throwing into his blitzkreig. Altogether, it is estimated here, some 2,500,000 German soldiers were engaged. An official spokesman said the Germans used about 80 divisions on the front of the attack, ten of which were armored and five motorized. Losses in men, he said, were nearly 500,000.

London, June 5 (AP).—The air ministry called today for trained volunteers 32 to 50 years old for administrative ground posts with the Royal Air Force, promising immediate commissions.

Simultaneously, the admiralty asked "well educated young men" from 18 to 20 to volunteer for training for temporary commissions as pilot or observer in the Naval Air Force.

Sir Archibald Sinclair, minister for air, told the House of Commons today the flying and training organization of the Royal Air Force was being expanded "on a considerable scale" to meet "all further requirements."

"The great importance of protecting airdromes in this country and other possible mass landing grounds for troop-carrying planes is fully recognized and defensive preparations are being pressed forward," he said.

The British said today their total strength in destroyers, despite the loss of six of these vital craft in the removal of Allied troops from Dunkerque, is greater than at the outbreak of the war.

New destroyers have been launched faster than they have been lost, it was said.

Last September Britain had 185 destroyers. Six of them were Canadian and five Australian. Six which had just been completed for Brazil were pressed into service in the royal fleet.

Britain has acknowledged loss of 20 destroyers.

The admiralty claims 11 German destroyers definitely have been sunk and that two others are believed sunk. The Nazis had just 22 heavy destroyers at the start of warfare, the admiralty says.

preparation. The dry weather favored their steel-armored machines.

The battle was the third great collision of the main French and German armies.

The first ended in the collapse of the Ninth French Army on the River Meuse; the second in the retreat of the First French Army from Flanders after the Belgian surrender had laid open its northern flank.

No Surprise

This third and greatest engagement was launched just one day after the fall of Dunkerque—the Channel port through which the northern Allies made their retreat—and it came as no surprise. Like an American football team conscious of its strength the Reichswehr put on straight power plays at the very points where they might be expected.

The extent of the German position south of the Somme—an area which the French had mopped up generally in the days of relative inaction there while the battle of Flanders raged—was not disclosed here.

(Military circles in London said "certain armored vehicles" of the German army were on both sides of Amiens although "not very close to the town," and that "certain elements" were south of the Somme but not sufficient to form a bridgehead for the invaders.)

The great issue in the whole struggle was whether the Germans can capture Paris and the lower Seine River, on which lie Rouen and Le Havre, and thus attempt to force France to cut away from Britain as an ally, or whether France could ride out the storm until Britain could mobilize another good-sized expeditionary force and replace the vast store of war implements left behind in Flanders.

The front reached eastward from the sea, near Abbeville, along the Somme and Aisne and across the Meuse to the region of Longwy, which is at the junction of the French - Belgian - Luxembourg borders at the point where the Germans first broke through into France.

But it was only on about 125 miles of this front that great activity seemed to be centered.

Reynaud Shakes Up His Cabinet

25 army house-cleaning in which 15 of France's highest ranking commanders were ousted, became chief assistant to Reynaud in the war ministry.

Apart from the ouster of Daladier, the appointment of Jean Prouvost, France's outstanding newspaper publisher, to the post of minister of information, constituted the biggest cabinet change.

Heads Chain of Papers

Prouvost is director general of the newspapers Paris-Midi and Paris-Soir and heads a chain of other publications.

He replaced Louis O. Frossard, who took over the ministry of public works from Anatole de Monzie. Frossard had been information minister since Reynaud became premier last March 21.

Yvon Delbos, foreign minister in the Popular Front cabinet of Socialist Premier Leon Blum, became minister of education, a post he held in the Daladier government.

Albert Sarraut, education minister and another veteran of French cabinets, was left out of the new line-up.

Lucien Lamoureaux was supplanted at the finance ministry by Marcel Bouthillier, who was Reynaud's right-hand man when the premier was finance minister under Daladier.

Georges Pernot was named minister of the French family, with special control of the former ministry of public health previously under Marcel Heraud.

Daladier Backed Gamelin

Reynaud succeeded Daladier last March when the Daladier government fell as a result of the Allied debacle in Norway.

It was he who brought Gen. Maxime Weygand and Marshal Henri Philippe Petain, both World War heroes, back into active charge of the war when the Germans broke through the Meuse front and subsequently drove to the English Channel.

At that time Reynaud made Weygand generalissimo of the Allied forces, succeeding Gen. Maurice Gamelin, and appointed Petain vice premier.

In the same stroke, Reynaud took over the war ministry from Daladier (who is reported to have blocked earlier removal of Gamelin).

It has been Reynaud's task to break to the French some of their most painful news of the war.

In telling his people of the Meuse break-through he blamed the French high command for "incredible faults" which he said brought "disaster" in the north.

But his spirit never weakened.

"France can never die," he cried. "If I were told only a miracle could save France then I believe in miracles, for I believe in France."

Then followed the sweeping army shakeup in which 15 generals were dismissed.

The new "ministry of the French family" was created to meet refugee problems.

300 U. S. Citizens In Ireland Hope For Cut-Rate Fare

Dublin, June 5 (AP).—Three hundred Americans, left behind when the United States liner President Roosevelt sailed for home Sunday with 700 or their luckier compatriots, counted their rapidly depleting funds today and wondered what the future held in store.

All have a little money, but nowhere near the $300 passage the steamship President Roosevelt's refugee passengers paid to get away from Europe's war.

Some felt their only hope lay in the dispatch of a Government-chartered boat to take them back across the Atlantic at fares commensurate with their pocketbooks.

There was little encouragement on this score from the American Legation which took the position that when Washington warned all nationals last autumn to leave and offered to take them home at whatever they could pay its responsibility ended.

Italy Declares 12-Mile Zone Unnavigable

Area Surrounding Nation, Possessions May Be Mined

By the Associated Press

Rome (Thursday), June 6.—Italy, poised for weeks on an apparently impending entry into war, declared a 12-mile zone around her coast and colonial possessions dangerous to navigation today.

The announcement of the danger zone did not say whether the coastal waters had been mined nor give the exact nature of the danger ships would face in the zone.

Mining of the coastal waters of Italy and her possessions would make the immediate waters of the Italian "boot" dangerous for navigation and close the Adriatic and the approaches to a large part of the African coast along Libya in the Mediterranean.

The government also ordered all sirens in Italy to cease sounding, effective today, since they would be used only for air-raid alarms if Italy enters the war.

Ships Must Get Authority

All ships must obtain authorization and instruction from Italian authorities in order to approach Italian coasts. Failing to do so, they will approach "at their own risk and peril."

Blackout regulations against possible air raids were issued by the Italian government tonight in further preparation for war.

A student demonstration against the Allies was broken up before the marchers reached the British consulate, which for several hours was guarded by a small detachment of troops.

During the day 20 Britons and their families, most of them members of the embassy's commercial staff, left for home.

to the southern front in preparation for the drive which now has started.

The operations of the German army are based on opportunism fully as much as are the operations of the German political machine. Unhampered by the teachings of military tradition, the Fuehrer is able to move his armies, once they are under way, in a fashion as unorthodox as its has proved successful.

This, it is stated in German military quarters, will be particularly evident in the second offensive now in movement. It is predicted it will be a war of movement on the grandest scale and as a military spectacle it will outshine anything seen hitherto on a battlefield. For the German armies in the west now have an opportunity to unfold to the fullest degree their blitzkreig technique against France.

If the French attempt to hold up the Germans before Paris, it is predicted here that they will simply be over-run. Their only chance, in the German view, is to build a line of resistance south of the capital. As the territory lost or gained in a single movement in modern warfare must be measured in tens of miles, the Germans regard Paris as already lost, for it is a bare 60 miles away from their foremost line.

German bombers paved the way for the advance troops by attacking troop concentrations south of Abbeville as well as bombing the harbor at LeHavre. Dive bombers are reported to have destroyed a number of French tanks in the Abbeville sector. The attacks, it is stated, were carried through successfully in spite of the heaviest aintiaircraft fire. Losses on either side remain unreported.

The attack on LeHavre is a logical step forward in the German plan to separate France completely from Britain. That France is now the immediate objective of the German attack, it is stated in Berlin, should not be taken to mean the Germans have forgotten England.

The British Isles for the present remain to one side of the German operations, for the danger that the French might be able to reknit their disorganized forces if the Germans did not follow up their first success promptly is too great to permit of an offensive against Britain at this juncture. Together the Allied armies still are dangerous opponents, the Germans hold: Separated they can more easily be brought to their knees.

26 Cross Channel Minus Oars, Sail

London, June 5. — Twenty-six French officers and men reached England today in a fishing boat without oars, sails or engine, after a 30-hour Channel crossing.

They were some of the last defenders to leave Dunkerque and were cut off from the main body. They found a small fishing boat on a beach. Rigging up a jury mast and improvising sails with blankets, they set their course by sun and stars, and were only a few miles from an English port when they were taken in tow.

Senate Sends Bill to Rejuvenate Army Command to White House

Retirement Age Would Be Lowered From 64 to 60

Accepting a recommendation by Gen. John J. Pershing, the Senate yesterday agreed to House changes in legislation designed to give the Army younger and more vigorous commanders.

An Administration-sponsored bill to lower the mandatory retirement age of Army officers from 64 to 60, and make lower ranking officers eligible for advancement to brigadier general was given final approval by the upper Chamber, 64 to 11. Yesterday's action sends it to the White House for President Roosevelt's signature.

Officials estimated that about 1,650 Army officers will be promoted July 1 under the terms of the bill. It supplants a system of promotion after specified years of service for the present method of moving up as vacancies occur in the rank above.

Gen. Pershing, 79-year-old retired General of the Armies of the United States, who at 56 was jumped over the heads of many older officers to command the A. E. F., informed the Senate it would be "most unfortunate at this critical moment" to favor older officers "at the expense of their juniors on whom we must largely depend for leadership in every phase of training and possible mobilization."

A letter from Pershing to this effect was read on the floor by Senator Hill (Democrat), of Alabama, shortly before the Senate voted. Before the body was a conference report urging rejection of an amendment written into the bill several weeks ago on motion of Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, which would have retained the present retirement age.

The bill provides for advancement of second lieutenants after three years' service; first lieutenants after ten years' service; captains after 17 years' service; majors after 23 years' service and lieutenant colonels after 28 years' service. Other provisions delay promotions to the latter two ranks in some cases.

The President could name lieutenant colonels as well as colonels to be brigadier generals under the bill, a move to obtain younger high commanders. The lowering of the retirement age to 60 will not become effective until June 30, 1942, while brigadiers and a few selected colonels thereafter will retire at 62.

Allies Bomb Nazi Plane Factories

down by antiaircraft at Aachen was burned to death. Bombs also were dropped on Bonn and nearby villages, the radio said.]

The French reported the Nazi raids of last week-end in the southeast had killed 25 persons and wounded 72.

Apparently as a part of the new drive on the Somme front, 20 German bombers attacked the northwest region early yesterday. Six of them were shot down, the French announced.

Later in the day, an air alarm sounded in Paris and antiaircraft gunfire was heard. On Monday, nearly 1,000 persons were killed or wounded in a great raid on the capital.

During the afternoon, a spot described as a "center" was bombed, with the Germans admittedly attaining several objectives, although meeting opposition from French fighters and antiaircraft.

There was an alarm in west central France subsequently, and Parisians heard antiaircraft guns in action again early last night.

Amplifying an earlier communique relating attacks on refineries and fuel depots in the Ruhr, the British air ministry said "strong forces of British bombers ranged over northwest Germany, setting oil storage plants ablaze and wrecking rail communications at numerous centers from Dortmund in the north to Mannheim in the south.

Four hundred high explosive and incendiary bombs were dropped on a large oil storage depot at Frankfort-on-Main, the British reported, adding that "Direct hits were registered on an extensive oil storage plant at Mannheim."

Flames Visible 100 Miles

The first bombs were dropped before midnight, and following aircraft completed destruction of the Mannheim plant, the communique asserted, "flames reddening the sky and being visible to aircraft crews flying more than 100 miles away from the scene of the vast conflagration."

The British said rail communications over a wide area of Germany were successfully attacked, and "the important marshaling yards near Essen, Dusseldorf and Wesel were heavily bombed."

The raids were conducted in the face of intense opposition, it said, in which "several o four craft suffered minor damage.

"All but one, however, returned safely to their bases,' 'the British said.

A. E. F. Hero Stabbed in Dispute Over the Second World War

WITNESSED STABBING—Mrs. Agnes Loukota and her daughter, Agnes, saw the knife and fist fight in which Kurt Schoenau, 47, German-born A. E. F. veteran, was stabbed. Miss Loukota last night gave a blood transfusion

Kurt Schoenau, 47, disabled, German-born hero of the A. E. F., was wounded critically yesterday in a knife and fist fight over the second World War.

Schoneau was stabbed three times in the chest and abdomen after an exchange of blows and insults that culminated a war dispute with a 59-year-old painter in front of 905 M street northwest, where Schoneau lives. The painter fled and is sought by police.

According to accounts by Mrs. Agnes Loukota, and her daughter, Miss Agnes Loukota, both of 905 M street, the fight started when the painter told Schoenau to "go back to Germany you Hitler-loving——" in answer to repeated taunts by the former soldier.

Clyde B. Thomas, 26, who witnessed the argument from his house, next door at 907 M street, said Schoenau was stabbed with a pocket knife after his opponent had been struck several blows in the face. His account was corroborated by other witnesses.

Making no outcry and standing stiffly upright despite the knife blows, the World War soldier was believed to have suffered only minor cuts until blood washed down his shirt front.

He was rushed to Emergency Hospital by Saul Rosenbaum, 3503 Georgia avenue northwest, and Clarence Blackwell, another roomer at 905 M street, who volunteered as blood donors for the wounded man last night.

Schoenau's World War service was revealed in tattered discharge papers found in his room.

Joining the Regular Army as a 21-year-old Chicago clerk in 1914, he went overseas with the famous First Division, first American troops to go to the support of the Allies in 1917.

Fighting in virtually every major offensive participated in by the A. E. F., including battles of Cantigny, St. Mihiel, the Meuse-Argonne, Marne, Sedan and Coblentz, he was gassed on one occasion and shot in the left knee in another.

As a result of the latter wound his leg remained partly paralyzed and he walked with the aid of a crutch.

On August 13, 1919, the German-American fighter was cited for "gallantry in action." Since his discharge from the Army, Schoenau has lived on a $100 per month pension from the Veterans' Administration.

Miss Loukota and Maus Hardt, of 907 M street, also offered themselves as blood donors.

Turks Begin Evacuation Of Istanbul

Emergency Air Raid Precautions Taken; More Shelters Rushed

Istanbul, June 5.—Turkey tonight ordered partial removal of citizens from Istanbul and adopted emergency air raid precautions.

All persons from the provinces here without regular employment will be removed to their former homes. Many thousands are expected to be affected.

Gen. Eugene Mittelhauser, French officer who succeeded Gen. Maxime Weygand as commander of the Allied Near East Armies, was reported to have proposed at a conference with the Turkish general staff in Ankara today that Turkish troops be sent to Syria to assure defense of that area in case French forces now in Syria should have to campaign in North Africa.

Owners of wooden buildings in this strategic and historic city on the Bosporus, entrance to the Black Sea, were ordered to spray the roofs with a fireproof chalk mixture to lessen the danger of incendiary bombs.

Immediate construction of more air raid shelters is planned.

Alexandria, June 5 (AP).—The Italian Minister to Egypt, Serafino Mazzolini, tonight postponed his return to Italy, giving rise to belief in Allied circles that Premier Mussolini might refrain from any war move until the chances for German victory further crystallized.

The minister had planned to go to Italy for a vacation starting June 15.

Mazzolini talked for 90 minutes today with the Egyptian premier, Aly Maher Pasha. The British Ambasssador, Sir Miles W. Lampson, followed Mazzolini in a conference with Maher Pasha. Both diplomats have been almost constantly at the heels of the premier since the possibilities of war in the Mediterranean brought the Allied fleet to Alexandria, May 3.

War Unleashes Streams of Refugees, One of History's Most Tragic Migrations

American Reporter Writes of Endless Columns of Misery

By Louis P. Lochner
Associated Press Staff Writer

With the German Army, by telephone to Berlin, June 5.—This war has set in motion one of the most tragic migrations in history.

There is nothing more pitiable than these endless streams of human misery that I have encountered again and again in northern France and Belgium.

Death and suffering are bad enough for the men in uniform.

But these hundreds of thousands of old men, women and children and infants had no choice about their role in this war.

So fast do armies move today that these refugees couldn't even make a sensible selection of what to take with them in their hurry.

Nor did they know at the time of fleeing that they would have to keep on the move, constantly retreating from Belgium or northern France, farther and farther south.

Population Fled

Near St. Pol, in northern France, there is a little village through which the retreating French and advancing Germans swept without doing heavy local damage.

The French evidently didn't make a stand there and the Germans had no interest in stopping. Yet the entire population of the village quite naturally, had fled.

En route to St. Pol I found chalked on houses remarks like "Grocer Monsieur Chablis fled with his family to master's house St. Pol," or "Monsieur and Madame Yvels and their children have gone to Rue de Marseille 21, St. Pol."

But when we reached St. Pol we realized that no one would find Monsieur or Madame Yvels in that town.

It had been shelled, meanwhile, and the civilians removed.

In the flight, children became separated from parents, husbands from wives, brothers from sisters in utter tragedy.

Plodding Through Dust

Had I not traveled for days and days along main roads leading from Cambrai to Arras I wouldn't have believed my own eyes.

Marching in one direction, and having the right of way, were German troops, artillery, soup kitchens, supply trucks, reserves of horses, ambulances, bicycles, motorcycles and armored cars.

You can imagine what dust those marching columns kicked up.

And, plodding through the dust columns in opposite directions, were hundreds of thousands of refugees attempting to return home. They always had to move far enough to one side to allow the German troops to pass.

Moreover, when they reached some narrow bridge, they had to wait until many miles of the German troop columns had passed.

Germany still is passing untold reserves into northern France, and columns 10 to 15 miles long are no uncommon sight.

In the villages little help could be given refugees.

Bread Queues Form Early

The citizens there were themselves dependent on Germany's army food kitchens. Bread was given out at 10 o'clock each morning at local magistrates' offices. On more than one occasion I saw women begin forming a queue at 6 a. m.

There are a few individual flights of refugees. One family fled as fast as possible by taking the family automobile along, packing it with household goods.

But nowhere in northern France is gasoline now available except to the army. So the father and two sons hitched themselves like horses ahead of the auto; the mother and two daughters in their teens pushed behind. Inside were a canary cage and a 3-year-old boy.

One sturdy French boy was pushing his aged mother on a wheelbarrow. She looked decidedly uncomfortable, for she sat perched on bedding, cooking utensils and a suitcase. Sweat streamed down her son's face.

A father and mother pulled an ancient springless cart. In it lay a baby sucking away at a pacifier. Trudging behind the car were boys and girls about 8 and 10 years old. They bravely carried a parrot in a cage suspended on walking canes.

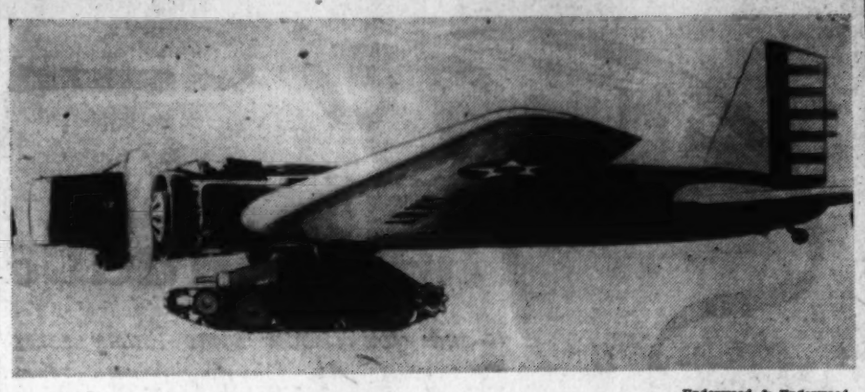

One woman, evidently of the leisure class, walked painfully in high-heeled shoes with costly furs around her neck. Her fashionable hat was bedraggled. She didn't seem to mind the heat so much as her hurting feet.

Two nuns guided one bicycle by hand. In a wire basket fastened to the handlebars were two baby orphans.

Interspersed among the thousands of pedestrians were horse-drawn vehicles—especially hay wagons. In these, whole families sat on top of their household goods and purposeless but cherished belongings such as framed wedding pictures and embroidered pillow slips.

Pots and pans hanging from the fathers' belts by straps were no uncommon sight. One wondered how and where order would ever come to this confusion, where these fugitives would finally land and how much of their families would ever be reunited.

Inventor Here With Plans for 'Flying Tank' Which He Claims Could 'Lick Hitler'

Underwood & Underwood

DESIGN OF PLANNED WAR MACHINE—Photo shows how one of Inventor J. Walter Christie's "flying tanks" would appear. By a secret device, the 73-year-old Christie said he could attach his new caterpillar light tank to a regular Army bomber

J. Walter Christie, an inventor of military weapons, came to Washington yesterday with plans for a "flying tank" that he said could "lick Hitler and he can't be licked any other way."

The 73-year-old Christie, developer seven years ago of what then was the world's fastest tank, declared his new machine could make it possible to drop an army of tanks behind enemy lines.

His caterpillar tread light tank would travel 90 miles an hour, he said, allowing it to be landed by a regular Army bomber to which it can be attached by a secret device. The plane can either cut away without landing itself or land with the tank, said Christie.

Special springs on the tank, he explained, would make it able to come down on a rough open field which would be disastrous to an airplane with ordinary rubber tires.

He said he had appointments today with President Roosevelt, War Department officials and Congressional leaders to discuss the machine. A War Department spokesman said yesterday the plans had not been submitted, hence he was unable to comment on what action, if any, would be taken.

Christie was quick to deny that any such machine was one of Hitler's secret weapons, despite the fact that unconfirmed reports have said the Germans were carrying light tanks by air.

"They've got to get it from me or they won't get it," he declared. "And if they don't get it they'll get a licking." He declared the machine was the creation of "sheer genius."

"I've spent 20 years and over $1,000,000 on it," he added. He said he had a model of the tank at his plant in Ridgefield Park, N. J., and that L. W. Greve, president of the Cleveland Pneumatic Tool Co. was ready to manufacture the plane attachment.

Christie said he had turned over rights for manufacture of his fast tank to the Allies, who were making them in Canadian plants and that foreign powers were seeking his plans for the "flying tank."

"And I would have every right to turn them over to Hitler if the United States won't take them, because I've spent everything I had on developing this machine," he said.

"But I am American and I don't spell patriotism 'p a y t r i o t i s m.'"

Thousands of Child Refugees Await Transfer to Canada

Canada with their mother, Princess Juliana, daughter of the exiled Queen Wilhelmina.]

Canada, for the British particularly, will be the nearest and most available place of safety. Transportation difficulties make it almost impossible to send child refugees to Australia and New Zealand, although both were willing to receive them.

Greatest Need Is in France

Crerar said Canada had offered the Allies the fullest cooperation in taking care of refugees, immediately the Netherlands and Belgium were invaded, and the offer was gratefully accepted. The greatest need at present was in France, where there is a refugee for every seven of the native population. However, the German capture of the Channel ports has made it difficult to get refugees out.

The children will be admitted as nonimmigrants so that after the war, if they wish to go, they will be able to depart with no more formality than if they had been tourists returning after a long visit.

[Geoffrey Shakespeare, secretary for the Dominions, told the British House of Commons the question of evacuating children to the Dominions is "receiving urgent consideration."

[Plans as first drafted only two weeks ago arranged to offer sanctuary to Belgian, Dutch and French waifs. But the scheme was rapidly readjusted, under the threat of air bombardments on the British isles, to take care of British children.]

Greatest Exodus Since Moses

By the Associated Press

If the threat of total warfare against the British isles forces the evacuation of women and children to empire outposts, such as Canada, the Allies would be prepared to handle the greatest mass exodus since Moses led 2,000,000 men, women and children into the promised land.

Such a tremendous undertaking would in comparison make the removal of 335,000 Allied troops from Flanders, as perilous and as staggering as it was, appear to be a simple task.

The means of escape for England's noncombatants would be hundreds of rusty tramp freighters and one-time passenger liners now engaged in the secretive task of ferrying troops and supplies to England and France from colonial possessions, particularly Canada.

These ghost-like craft have formed an almost endless chain between Halifax and England. Their dingy cargo holds have carried millions of dollars' worth of American planes, foods and other supplies over 3,000 miles of ocean, daring gale, fog, sleet, snow and the ever-present threat of Nazi U-boat and raider.

If called upon to evacuate women and children, their present duties would continue, as most of them now come back partially empty.

There was no figure possible for the number of persons who might be evacuated, but at the start of the war approximately 3,000,000 children, nursing mothers and old men were removed from England's cities to rural areas. London alone sent almost 1,500,000 children away, but more than half of them returned later.

The flight of the Jews from Egypt was the greatest exodus ever recorded. The Bible's Book of Exodus says Moses led 600,000 men; the Jewish Encyclopedia says that with the women and children the host numbered 2,000,000.

Paris Closes Schools

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, June 5.—Fearing new German bombings of Paris, the French government has decided to close all grammar schools and lower grades of public schools in the capital and its suburbs, it was announced today. Measures are now being taken to evacuate 350,000 children from the Paris area.

The first German bombardment of Paris June 3 caused the deaths of 20 children in thickly populated Parisian suburbs, and parents who were unwilling to let their children go until two days ago are now begging the authorities to take them away, it was said at the French committee of social aid.

At the beginning of the war at least half of the city's children were taken away but a great many were subsequently brought back by their parents.

the new streamlined Infantry divisions at Fort George G. Meade, Md., with troops stationed at other nearby posts forming the nucleus of the fighting unit.

Marshall revealed that President Roosevelt's $1,577,000,000 supplemental defense budget would provide close to 3,000 combat planes for the Army and tanks and other equipment for four additional mechanized divisions. The chief of staff said this expansion would give the Army about 11,000 planes, about double the present authorized strength—set last year—and four times the number now in service.

Earlier, Senate and House committees acted swiftly and all but unanimously to bring forward legislation warning Germany to stay out of the Western Hemisphere. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee simultaneously approved an Administration resolution declaring this Nation will oppose any attempt by a non-American power to gain territory now held by another such power.

The measure would write into law a long accepted principle of the Monroe Doctrine and is designed to serve notice on Hitler that the United States would not permit his legions to take possession of any new world Allied colonies which he might claim from developments in the present war.

General Marshall said an increase in Regular Army man-power to 335,000 would permit the Army to attain quickly a strength of 12 mobile divisions, which he said he hoped would avoid any necessity for mobilizing the National Guard.

More Men for Air Corps

A regular force of this size, the Chief of Staff indicated, probably would be sufficient to meet any trouble arising in the near future in the Western Hemisphere.

Fear that troops might have to be used in this way this summer or fall caused the President to request authority of Congress to order out the National Guard and Reserves in case of need, a proposal that has aroused a storm of protest on Capitol Hill.

Marshall did not suggest the increase in Regulars in lieu of the Guard mobilization authority, but in addition to it, as a means by which use of the authority could be avoided. He said no increase beyond the 280,000 men provided in the pending Army supply bill was being proposed at this time by the Administration but that he had recommended a 400,000 strength to several Congressional committees.

Most of the men in excess of 335,000 would go to the Air Corps, the Chief of Staff said, for new planes to be ordered. The existing strength of the Army is 227,000 men.

Pepper Proposal Rejected

Other defense developments of the day were:

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee rejected for the second time a proposal of Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, authorizing the President to send Army and Navy planes and weapons to the Allies. The vote was 21 to 2. Later the Floridian carried his fight to the floor, declaring that military authorities broad believe 300 American war planes now would stop Hitler.

Tentative approval was given by the House Ways and Means Committee to legislation lowering the Federal tax exemption for single and married persons to $800 and $2,000, respectively, to provide some of the additional billions required for the defense program.

The Senate Appropriations Committee approved a $975,650,000 relief bill, carrying authority for training CCC enrollees in "noncombatant" military duties and WPA workers in defense industrial tasks. WPA Chief Harrington predicted one-fourth of the sum would be spent on defense projects, such as airports, roads and armories.

Army Retirement Bill Passed

Legislation lowering the mandatory retirement age for Army officers from 64 to 60 and promoting 1,650 officers immediately was passed by the Senate and sent to the White House, as Gen. John J. Pershing, in backing the bill, urged younger and more vigorous commanders for the Army.

President Roosevelt, in a letter to the Senate Military Committee, described as "unnecessary" a proposal of Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, for creation of a five-member nonpartisan defense board. The President called attention to his new defense advisory commission and authority requested to employ "dollar-a-year men."

The Potomac Electric Power Co. revealed plans for installing a "special emergency" radio transmitter at the Benning power plant to assure ready communication with repair crews should sabotage or other difficulties shut off both power and telephone facilities.

Aims in Near East Same As Allies, Russians in Britain Say

Russia Determined To Stay Out of War, London Circles Add

By the Associated Press

London, June 5.—Allied diplomatic maneuvers for rapprochement with Russia bore some fruit today in the acknowledgement in Russian circles here that Russia and the British-French Allies have common interests in the Black Sea and the eastern Mediterranean.

This view was accompanied by studied emphasis in these same circles that Russia is determined to avoid involvement in the European war.

An important offshoot of the improved relations between Russia, Germany's economic partner, and the Allies was the hope expressed by one British source that this new state of affairs may make Italy hesitant to enter the war.

But Italy's plunge into the conflict still is regarded by most British as definitely a matter of time.

Britain was said tonight to be urgently pursuing, with "seemingly good prospects," her campaign for better relations with Russia with this twofold purpose in mind:

To check one leak in the blockade against Germany.

To strengthen the Allied position in the Balkans and Near East.

The friendship of Russia with Turkey, Britain's ally, is regarded as a means of strengthening, at least, cooperation between the Allies and Russia in southeastern Europe.

Informed sources acknowledged they saw in Russian acceptance of Sir Stafford Cripps as the new British ambassador to Moscow no great change in Russian policy and no true indication of a severance of German-Russian relations.

However, British opinion is that Adolf Hitler's expanding influence is creating a certain amount of concern in the Kremlin.

Russia is not likely to forget, one British source said, the covetous eye the Germans long have cast toward the Ukraine.

This source observed that the "personal" difficulties in making friends with Russia, which existed when Neville Chamberlain was Prime Minister, do not exist now.

He recalled that Prime Minister Churchill wrote before the war that Britain could not discount the fact that friendship with the Soviet state would be a decided advantage.

known to set forth, however, that under a law of July, 1919, authorizing the Army to dispose of surplus armaments held at that time, old equipment can be turned over to private American manufacturers in payment for new equipment to be produced. Under American and international law, private manufacturers can sell equipment to belligerent governments.

Under this ruling, the question of direct sale of war equipment by a neutral government to a belligerent government will not arise, and competitive bidding in sales to private domestic concerns or individuals will not be required.

In diplomatic circles, it was said yesterday that arrangements for the transfer of World War equipment had been completed "in principle." It was not revealed, however, whether details regarding sale and shipment had been fully settled. There was general expectation, however, that shipments would begin shortly.

The Attorney General's ruling applied only to equipment held by the Army in 1919, but it was reported in official circles that moves are under way to make possible the transfer to the Allies of a certain number of planes now in Army service and, perhaps, of naval destroyers.

By a vote of 19 to 2, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday rejected a proposal by Senator Pepper of Florida to authorize sale by the Government of modern military planes, ships and other equipment to the Allies. This particular proposal never obtained Administration support, however, and it was said in some informed circles that the same result might be achieved administratively or through another type of legislation.

In diplomatic circles it was reported that the Administration is giving considerable attention to the matter, and several anti-Administration Senators were said to be favorable to more general legislation which would permit the Army to dispose of some of its older line planes and equipment for new equipment now nearing completion if administrative action to attain this result cannot be developed.

Nazis Infest Key Points In Uruguay

Organization Strong At Points Dominating The River Plate

Copyright by New York Times

Montevideo, June 5.—The framework of the Nazi organization in Uruguay indicates that German leaders are working carefully and efficiently on an international plan looking toward the eventual invasion and occupation of this country with the help of Nazi groups in Argentina and Brazil.

This supposition is strongly supported by the constant suspicious comings and goings of Nazi agents across the frontiers. Documents, maps and photographs found on several who have been arrested constitute strong circumstantial evidence.

The Nazi organization in Uruguay is based on a series of "stauzpunkts," or support points, all of which are at highly strategic centers such as important railroad junctions, air fields, river ports and frontier cities fronting parallel "stutzpunkts" in the bordering republics.

At Rail Junction

One of the chief support points is at Penaranda, an important railroad junction just outside Montevideo, where the principal railroad shops are located. This junction controls Uruguay's two railroad systems leading to the Argentine and Brazilian frontiers.

The "stutzpunkt" at the German agricultural colony at Nueva Helvecia dominates the department of Colonia, whence there are airlines to the Argentine coast in ten minutes and steamers in two and one-half hours. This point also controls several small ports directly in front of the delta of the Parana River in Argentina, which long has been a haven of smugglers because of the difficulty of policing numerous rivers, canals and islands which constitute the delta.

Diplomatic and other observers here think it highly significant that Nazi organizations in Argentina and Brazil maintain similar support points at towns facing these Uruguayan centers.

Propaganda—Intense

It was declared in a congressional debate in Argentina last week that there has recently been intense Nazi propaganda and other activities in all foreign agricultural colonies in the province of Entre Rios, which faces Uruguay across the Uruguay River.

Uruguay has no navy, no coast defense, practically no airforce and its small army, equipped with 1897 rifles, admittedly is incapable of any defense against a few hundred modern troops. Furthermore, the occupation of Uruguay would give the Germans control of the River Plate and would go a long way toward insuring domination of Argentina and Paraguay.

D. C. Red Cross Relief Quota Still Far Short

Fund Not at Half-Way Mark Yet; $24,769 Donated Yesterday

Despite receipts of $24,769.27 yesterday, the District of Columbia Red Cross Chapter's drive for $300,000 still remained far below the halfway mark with a total of $137,531.70 received to date.

Meanwhile, the American Red Cross, with $7,031,814 of the $20,000,000 war relief fund collected, planned to dispatch its first "mercy ship" to Bordeaux the end of next week. The steamship McKeesport will be loaded at New York with $1,000,000 worth of motor trucks, ambulances, foodstuffs, clothing, bedding, drugs and surgical supplies.

Other chartered ships will follow, carrying cargoes comprised largely of surplus food commodities, is was announced, following a conference of President Roosevelt, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Red Cross Chairman Norman H. Davis.

The State Department has instructed the Red Cross to have the McKeesport fly the Red Cross and United States flags and to proceed fully lighted at night. All belligerent governments will be notified of her sailing and safe conduct for her will be requested, Red Cross officials said.

While arranging for loading the "mercy ship," it was said, the Red Cross has continued to send consignments of relief supplies for the refugees in regular cargo ships.

Yesterday's war relief collections in Washington included "exceptionally satisfying returns" from Government employes, officials reported.

The Federal Works Agency sent in $328.25; Veterans' Administration, $655.65; War Department, $756.60; Agriculture, $1,610.04; Interstate Commerce Commission, $1,644.05; General Accounting Office, $1,983; Bureau of the Budget, $343.75; Federal Housing Administration, $310; Army War College, $10; Securities and Exchange Commission, $820.85; Library of Congress, $106.65; Office of Government Reports, $15; Internal Revenue Bureau, $2,770, and National Capital Parks, $24.

In the non-Government field, the Potomac Electric & Power Co. took the lead for the day with a firm gift of $1,000. Employes of Loew's Theaters reported all of them had contributed, with gifts averaging more than $5.

Other special gifts included Woodward & Lothrop, $250; S. Kann Sons Co., $200; F. W. Woolworth Co., $100; Guy Curran & Co., Inc., $130; Walter E. Edge, $200, and Mrs. J. H. Lewis, $200.

British to Study Ford's Plans To Build Planes

Industrialist Declared Recently He Could Make 1,000 Ships Daily

London, June 5 (AP).—The ministry of aircraft production has instructed representatives in the United States to "investigate fully any proposition" Henry Ford might be able to make to the British government in connection with his recent assertion that his company could produce 1,000 aircraft daily within six months.

The disclosure of the inquiry was made today by the ministry's parliamentary secretary, Col. J. J. Llewellin.

Concentration on Defense Urged

Milwaukee, June 5 (AP).—Owen D. Young, suggesting that "practically everyone" be put to work on National defense, today advocated operation of the Nation's technical schools on a three-shift basis to train youth for productive jobs.

Young, honorary chairman of the General Electric Co., board of directors, said he was here for the Holstein-Friesian Association of America convention as a "common farmer," not as an industrialist.

"There is no greater weakness in defense than to have a lot of idle and discouraged people," Young told interviewers.

"We have great numbers of young persons and an accumulation of several years from schools and colleges who have been idle to their injury and to our loss.

"We have an opportunity now to train them to do the work needed for defense.

"Some of them will elect to go directly into the military service."

Carrier Wasp at Sea

Boston, June 5 (AP).—The U. S. Navy's new $21,000,000 aircraft carrier Wasp left today for a one-day cruise off shore and is scheduled to pull away for Norfolk about July 1 to take on 72 planes. She has been tied up here for a month since her trials.

The new destroyer tender Dixie, which arrived in Boston May 30 from Camden, N. J., sailed last night for an unannounced destination, presumably for trials off Rockland, Me., before a Navy trial board.

which conflicts with the Communist Party line."

Officials said the new executive orders on entry of aliens were intended not so much to block entry as to provide a much closer check on those who are permitted to enter. It is intended, they say, that the Government will know all pertinent facts about those it admits.

However, wide latitude is given the State Department in determining whether any alien's admittance "would be contrary to the public safety."

Of the additional $8,558,800 asked of Congress for alien control, $4,358,800 would go to the Department of Justice, chiefly to add 500 agents to the FBI staff, and $2,200,000 to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, soon to be moved from the Labor to the Justice Department.

As a part of the Presidential request, the Budget Bureau said:

"It is anticipated there will be a great number of prisoners to be handled, and marshals and deputy marshals may be called upon to guard and protect Federal or seized property, and to serve a large number of processes."

The FCC order against amateur radio communication with foreign stations will apply to some 55,000 licensed amateur operators in this country. It was said the commission could revoke the license of any offender, confiscate his equipment and cause his prosecution by the Department of Justice, with a $500 fine for each offense a possible penalty.

The order of prohibition does not apply to communication between licensed amateur stations in the United States and possessions. Nor does it bar United States citizens licensed in the Philippines or Canal Zone from communicating with amateurs in the United States.

Roosevelt, Stevens Study War Embargo

Following up its unofficial embargo on machine tools, the Administration may move soon to curtail exports of any war materials, pig iron, iron or steel scrap, or any of 29 strategic and critical materials including rubber, tin and aluminum, when necessary, it was learned yesterday.

Following a discussion yesterday at the White House between President Roosevelt and Raymond B. Stevens, chairman of the Tariff Commission, it was learned that both the President and the commission are exerting their influence to secure power to impose such broad restrictions.

They have thrown their support, it was learned, behind bills now pending in Congress which would permit the President to stop or limit exports of any "military equipment or munitions, or component parts thereof, or machinery, tools," or machinery necessary for their manufacture.

Their backing was also disclosed to be behind a measure which would flatly forbid exports except under license, of any material included on the War Department's list of strategic and critical materials, pig iron, iron or steel scrap.

The full list of strategic materials, which must be secured largely from sources outside the United States, includes antimony, chromium, coconut shell char, managanese ferrograde, manila fiber, mercury, mica, nickel, quartz crystal, quinine, rubber, silk, tin and tungsten.

The critical materials, whose procurement, the War Department says, would be "less difficult," include aluminum, asbestos, cork, graphite, hides, iodine, kapok, opium, optical glass, phenol, platinum, tanning materials, toluol, vanadium and wool.

The State Department revealed Tuesday that, by cooperation of machine tool makers, exports of these tools, vital for national defense, have already been limited.

Pepco Asks Authority to Build Radio Plant for 'Emergency'

Permission to install a "special emergency" radio transmitter at the Benning power plant, which would fit in with War Department plans for protection of the Capital's utilities, was requested yesterday by the Potomac Electric Power Co. of the District Zoning Commission.

By use of the transmitter, "trouble shooting" repair trucks could be instructed to go to points where repairs are needed, as police squad cars now are directed from headquarters.

Company officials said plans for the transmitter were formulated more than a year ago and without any "thought whatsoever to the effect of war conditions." A War Department spokesman yesterday revealed antisabotage plans are now in the hands of the Washington Provisional Brigade for the protection of the gas, electric, water, transportation and communication utilities.

Plants Guard Against Sabotage

The transmitter would operate on a frequency of 2,276 kilocycles with a power of 1,000 watts. Permit to construct and operate the transmitter was approved by the Federal Communications Commission January 15.

J. H. Ferry, vice president and chief engineer of Pepco, said the radio system is "intended entirely as a means of preventing or reducing the extent of interruptions to service or to the restoration of service following accidental interruptions."

Inquiry yesterday disclosed that power plants here are especially alert against saboteurs. Only engineers and apprentices, known to the guards, are permitted to enter the plants.

The zoning commission was asked to change the zoning at the Benning plant from residential to first commercial to permit the erection of the transmitter. An amendment to the zoning regulations was also proposed which would permit erection of transmitters on residential property if approved by the Board of Zoning Adjustment.

A 25-mile area around Washington would be serviced by the transmitter, with central control in the Pepco Building at Tenth and E streets northwest. The Capital Transit Co. "troubleshooters" would also operate with the system.

Trucks Would Carry Receivers

In a statement last night Ferry said in part:

"We have received inquiries which indicate that our purpose in establishing this system was in some way identified with the possibility of war or other national emergency. We would point out that we started our studies and plans for the establishment of this system more than a year ago without any thought in mind of anything other than our own responsibilities and obligations to serve the public.

"We have been asked as to the employment of this system in the case of war. We can answer only by saying that the use of the system is strictly controlled by the Government and our use or non-use would, with all other radio transmitting equipment, be dictated by the Federal Government."

Many Notables to Pay Tribute to 'Tom' Edison

High Officials to View "Edison, the Man;" Roadside Also Plans "Official" Opening; This, That and the Other About the Theater

AS A TRIBUTE to an American creative genius, who must be numbered among the greatest benefactors of the human race, a considerable group of noted personages is expected to assemble in Loew's Capitol Theater tomorrow night to witness "Edison, the Man," starring Spencer Tracy in the title role.

BELL

Charles Edison, son of the "Wizard of Menlo Park" and recently resigned Secretary of the Navy to become New Jersey gubernatorial candidate, will head the guest list. Among others to whom invitations have been extended are Vice President John N. Garner, Senators Alben Barkley, Robert F. Wagner, Pat Harrison, Joseph F. Guffey, Peter G. Gerry, Albert Chandler, Bennett C. Clark, Prentiss M. Brown, Scott Lucas, Alva B. Adams, Key Pittman, Tom Connally, Kenneth McKellar, Millard Tydings, Richard Russell and James F. Byrnes; Jesse Jones and L. W. Robert, jr.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Justices of the U. S. Supreme Court also are expected to be present, along with Secretary of War Woodring, Scretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Secretary Harold L. Ickes, Attorney General Robert Jackson, Secretary Wallace, Postmaster General James A. Farley, Secretary Perkins, Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Stephen Early, of the Presidential secretariat; Gen. Edward M. Watson, J. Edgar Hoover, Sumner Welles and District Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen, J. Russell Young and David McCoach.

Members of the House of Representatives, Washington correspondents and other Capital leaders will complete the distinguished group.

When the final moments of "Edison, the Man" are reached, this audience of notables will hear Thomas Alva Edison deliver from the screen words of wisdom that are peculiarly appropriate to the present period of world tragedy. It is a speech that so succinctly encompasses the message conveyed by the Technicolor short subject, "The Flag Speaks," that one wonders why that inspiring film classic was not included on the bill with "Edison, the Man," instead of with "Lillian Russell," at the Palace.

If you are one who keeps his live ear close to the ground, you no doubt have caught rumblings of those rumors that an important announcement soon will be forthcoming from a prominent Washington acting group and that there still is a chance that the Olney Theater may get going before too long to complete the Capital's usual hot-weather trio of pastoral playhouses. I said rumors.

Patriarchs of the theater will get a "bang" out of three of the lesser characters in "Lillian Russell," when that highly-touted biographical film opens at the Palace tomorrow. They are Weber and Fields and Joe Cawthorn, who are played by themselves, instead of by Don Ameche. Mr. Ameche here has to content himself with the part of Ted Solomon, Miss Russell's second husband, in fact, but her first in the picture. Weber and Fields are celebrating their sixty-fifth year in show business and Cawthorn, of course, was long a Broadway favorite in his own right and, later, as chief comedian in practically all of the musical comedies in which Elsie Janis starred. It seems a little strange to see him without the concertina that so long was part of his stock in trade. He should have perpetuated it the way Charlie Winninger has his trombone.

Tomorrow night, the Variety Club will be diverted by a stag smoker, with the Washington Film Salesmen's Club acting as hosts to the members. The major domo's baton on this occasion will be wielded by Vince Daugherty, president of the hosting organization.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, June 5.

If some producer doesn't wake up and start Lynn Overman, he's missing one of the greatest bets in pictures. Of course, we all know what a life saver he is to so many, especially "Safari." The audience screamed every time they saw his face. They always do. He's served his apprenticeship. Come on, now—give him a part worthy of his ability.

Gregory Ratoff made the test for his wife, Eugenie Leontovitch, that got her the part of the mother in "Four Sons," and when they started it she said, "You know, this is wrong!" Greg whispered, "I know, but this is the way they want it. If you do it this way you'll get the part." She did. He doubts if she'll ever make another picture. The nervous strain was too great. Whenever they said "Cut!" she went frantic, because she was right in the midst of an emotional scene.

The Metro executive who attended the San Francisco Fair had his eyes opend by Johnny Weissmuller's success. Over a thousand kids wait for his autograph after each performance, and all want to know when he's going to do another Tarzan picture.

Handsome Jose Mojica returns to Twentieth Century from Maxico City in August. He'll make a series of pictures for Latin America. Let's hope this time we'll also have a chance to see them, because he's a favorite concert singer from coast to coast.

Walter Pidgeon, when invited to dine with an art collector, said, "No, thanks. When I go to dinner I like hot soup—not Rembrandt."

Louella O. Parsons' Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

(While Louella O. Parsons is on her Honolulu vacation, this column is being written by her daughter, Harriett Parsons, producer of "Screen Snapshots.")

Hollywood, June 5 (INS).—C. B. DeMille must think pretty highly of Paulette Goddard's work in his "Northwest Mounted Police," for I understand he has made up his mind to give her the lead role of "Loxie," in "Reap the Wild Wind," which he'll put into production in the fall. The Thelma Strabel magazine serial recently purchased by Paramount, tells of wreckers along the Florida coast in the 1830's.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Paulette left Mexico City yesterday with her mother and is driving back to Hollywood to spend a couple of weeks. Then she'll trek on to Dennis, Mass., for her role in "Our Betters," at the Cape Cod Playhouse.

Most important femme role, next to La Hepburn's, in "The Philadelphia Story," has just been handed to Ruth Hussey, who went over big at the "Susan and God" preview the other night. Ruth turned in such a sympathetic and appealing portrayal of the other woman in Freddie March's life that many in the audience expressed disappointment at the picture's tag, which had him returning to Joan Crawford.

Also set for "Philadelphia Story" is little Virginia Weidler, who'll play Hepburn's younger brat of a sister. Jimmy Stewart is still leading contender for top male spot.

Casting the Die: Richard Carlson has just been signed by George Abbott for the movie version of the Abbott stage hit, "Too Many Girls," which goes before the cameras at RKO June 21 . . . E. H. Griffith, pleased with the job Lynne Overman did in "Safari," has handed him a role in "Virginia." Overman's now in Providence, R. I., for the world premiere of "Safari" . . . Penny Singleton's heart interest, Bob Sparks, who produces the "Blondie" series, will make a musical with Penny, Arthur Lake and Rita Hayworth.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Wayne and Bubbles Morris, still denying those rift rumors, have been stepping out since Bubbles got back. They were at the Brown Derby and Ciro's acting most devoted; Fritz Feld, visiting the girl friend, Virginia Kraft, at Glen Ivy, Hot Springs, fell and broke his leg; there was time out on the "No Time for Comedy" set while Bill Haines, George Cukor and Anita Loos hosted a surprise birthday party for Roz Russell; twosomes about town included Mary Beth Hughes and Frank Swann at the Sphinx Club, Jeffrey Lynn and Dana Dale at the Tropics, Elyse Knox, bandaged to the eyes after her accident, with Photographer Paul Hesse at the Tail o' the Cock, Gene Tierney and Bajron Polan at Hollywood Park, Bob Ritchie and Socialite Nancy Sewall at the Florentine Gardens, Judith Anderson and Orry Kelly at Ciro's, Constance Bennett and Richard Ainley at the Seven Seas.

Bill Holden dashed into town from the "Arizona" location to be with Brenda Marshall over the week-end; Walter Brennan's back after a visit to his home town in Massachusetts. He hadn't been there in 20 years and did the natives give him a welcome! That big military ball which the United States Marines are putting on at the Los Angeles Breakfast Club Saturday night should be veddy colorful.

That's all today. Whew!

Biographies And Comedy in New Film Crop

Roadside Theater Opens Summer 'Barn' Season; Other Amusements

"LILLIAN RUSSELL." The fabulous Iowa girl of the Mauve Decade is the subject of this new biografilm, opening tomorrow morning at Loew's Palace Theater. Alice Faye plays Tony Pastor's discovery, who seldom knew failure from the day of her first appearance on the stage, in 1879, until her death, in 1922. Don Ameche, Henry Fonda and Edward Arnold are featured and the supporting cast includes Warren Williams, Weber and Fields, Leo Carrillo, Helen Westley, Dorothy Peterson, Ernest Truex, Eddie Foy, jr., Nigel Bruce and Lynn Bari.

Earle

"BROTHER ORCHID." Edward G. Robinson plays an underworld leader who forsakes his comrades because of their illegal ways in this satirical comedy. His attempts to carve out a new life very nearly fail, until chance turns him into an orchid grower. Ann Sothern plays his not-very-bright girl friend and Humphrey Bogart, Donald Crisp, Ralph Bellamy and Allen Jenkins are featured. Cardini, the "Suave Deceiver," headlines the stage revue. Lynn, Royce and Vanya, dancers; Vic Hyde, the "One Man Swing Band;" Costello's Canine Mimics and "Sing a Song With Mike," are the other attractions. Opens tomorrow morning.

Capitol

"EDISON, THE MAN." Spencer Tracy has the title role in this film biography of the great inventor, a continuation of the life story begun in "Young Tom Edison," by Mickey Rooney. Rita Johnson, Lynn Overman, Charles Coburn, Gene Lockhart, Henry Travers and Felix Bressart have the important supporting roles in the screen-play which details the discovery of electric lights and the phonograph. Dixie Dunbar, the minute Georgia tap dancer, who has won fame in the films, brings her own unit to headline the Capitol stage revue. The Rhythm Rockets will offer a skit satirizing Sam Jack Kaufman, conductor of the orchestra, and Art Brown, organist. Opens tomorrow morning.

Roadside

"THE SEALED WELL" or "What Will Not a Mother Dare?" will open the summer season at the Red Barn Theater on the Rockville Pike Monday evening. The familiar players in this traditional "meller" will include Paul Messink, Batty Brunstetter, Larry Lawrence, Natalie Core, Norman Rose and Ted Miller. An entr'acte is also promised titled, "Those Wedding Bells Shall Not Ring Out!"

RKO-Keith's

"IRENE." Held over for a third week, this film adaptation of the popular musical comedy co-stars Anna Neagle and Ray Milland. Billie Burke, Roland Young, Alan Marshall, May Robson and Arthur Treacher are featured. "Donald's Dog Laundry," a Walt Disney cartoon, is also continued.

Metropolitan

"TORRID ZONE." After an engagement at the Earle, this comedy of the banana country of Central America returns with James Cagney, Ann Sheridan and Pat O'Brien in the starring roles. Andy Devine, Helen Vinson, Jerome Cowan and George Tobias are the featured performers. Opens tomorrow morning.

Columbia

"20 MULE TEAM." Wallace Beery and Marjorie Rambeau have the leading roles in this story of Death Valley pioneers fighting to locate a new borax lode before their company goes bankrupt. Noah Beery, jr., Ann Baxter, Douglas Fowley and Burton Churchill are featured in the film, which has already played a week at the Capitol. Opens tomorrow morning.

Little

"THE MILL ON THE FLOSS." With Geraldine Fitzgerald as Maggie Tulliver, this British screen adaptation of the George Eliot novel continues with Frank Lawton, Sam Livesey, Victoria Hopper and Fay Compton in the supporting roles.

Trans-Lux

"NORWAY'S FATE." The Norwegian people, their elected King Haakon and a map story of the Nazi invasion form the central short subject on the newsreel screen this week. "Aquapoise," depicting aquaplaning; "The Big Premiere," an "Our Gang" comedy, and "Billposters," a Disney cartoon, are the other shorts. Opens tomorrow morning.

Atlas

THE ETON BOYS, radio songsters, will headline the stage revue Sunday and Monday at the northeast house. Leon Brusiloff's Music Masters continue their community sing sessions and two other vaudeville acts are promised. The double feature screen attraction stars Mickey Rooney in "Young Tom Edison" and Humphrey Bogart in "The Return of Dr. X."

Open-Air

"HELL'S ANGELS" shares the screen with "U-Boat 29" for a three-day period opening this evening. With Jean Harlow and Ben Lyon in the leading roles. The Howard Hughes film of some years ago is still viewed as one of the greatest aviation pictures. Conrad Veidt stars in the submarine film.

Glen Echo

THE AMUSEMENT PARK boasts a swimming pool that is one of the most sanitary in the country. Actually three pools in one, the modern "swimming hole" uses over 1,500,000 gallons of water each day. Paul Kain and his orchestra play for dancing every night except Sunday, in the Spanish Garden Ballroom.

Wilson Line

THE S. S. MOUNT VERNON, the new streamliner, sails from the Seventh street wharves daily at 9:30 a. m., 2 and 8:30 p. m., for Marshall Hall Park, on the Potomac. On the first two trips stopovers at Mount Vernon may be arranged and on the night cruises, which are scheduled for every evening except Mondays, McWilliams' orchestra plays for dancing.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, June 5.

PAUL PORTER, Columbia Broadcasting System attorney in Washington, will take a leave of absence—for an administrative position with the new defense commission.

HARRY HOPKINS: Your Undersecretary of Commerce, Edward J. Noble, will be elected chairman of the Inter-American Development Commission this week. This commission now has became charged with great importance, because of its responsibility in fostering the economic development of Latin and Central America.

MICKEY ROONEY: Fred F. Finklehoffe, who wrote your new movie, "Strike Up the Band," returned to New York last week-end. His fiancee, Katharine Murphy—who had worked in his play, "Brother Rat"—married someone else while Fred was in Hollywood. All these weeks he had been dreaming of the scene when he would meet her again—and concocting the clever lines he would say. Five minutes after he arrived Finklehoffe went to Sardi's, and Katharine Murphy was there. The lines he had planned to utter vanished from his mind. All that the playwright could say was, "Good luck. Whatever became of Happy Endings?"

PITTSBURGH POST-GAZETTE: Welcome to the fold. I hope your readers will like this column . . . John Barrymore: Your former wife, Dolores Costello, would not have brought that suit against you last week if you hadn't been "carried" from your home to the California-bound train.

ABE RELES: "Pittsburgh Phil," your former partner in Murder, Inc., has grown a beard in jail and continues to act strangely. If he persists in this, District Attorney O'Dwyer will have psychiatrists examine him, to prepare against a defense of insanity . . . Laurence Olivier: Madeleine Carroll will join you in returning to England. She says she's flying on the Clipper next week-end to drive an ambulance. Furthermore, she is contributing her $1,500 fee, for broadcasting with Bob Hope, to the Red Cross . . . Alexander Woollcott: Rex O'Malley, who was in your Coast company of "The Man Who Came to Dinner," just came back—vanguard of the cast calling themselves "Woollcott Refugees."

WALTER WINCHELL: Thanks for your generous offer to help, but I'll be up and about this week . . . Incidentally, Earle H. Rodney, of the New York Stock Exchange, who was riding with me during the smash-up, is still at Doctors Hospital. He heard I had a concussion and insisted that the doctors X-ray my head, to determine once and for all whether a Broadway columnist can possibly have a brain. I've agreed, and in return he's promised to have his left side X-rayed, to determine once and for all whether a Wall street broker can possibly have a heart.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE: Your former husband, Capt. Alan MacIntosh, had a fist fight with a sailor outside of the Zombie, on the World's Fair midway, this past week-end . . . Bob Moses: Mayor LaGuardia saw "Keep Off the Grass" Saturday night, and sat in the first row. When, in one of the park scenes, a park employe bows to a nature lover, and asks, "May I be of service?" Fiorello told the sax player in the orchestra: "He'd never make a city employe. He's too polite" . . . Ambassador Oumansky: Is it true that Russia will start a passenger ship service from New York to a port in the Black Sea?

GEN. PERSHING: Department of Commerce figures, soon to be released, reflect the change in warfare since the time when you headed the A. E. F. In 1916 this Government shipped to the Allies $16,600,000 worth of mules and less than $7,000,000 worth of planes . . . But in the six months war period, from September to February, we exported to the Allies, via Canada, only six mules—worth $150—and $61,200,000 worth of aircraft.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST: James Young, your correspondent who was arrested by the Japanese officials in Tokyo, has returned to New York. He said that his incarceration helped him break two habits—drinking and smoking . . . Peter Arno: If any of your glamour-boy troupe wants to date Carmen Miranda, beware of the "translator" she insists on bringing along. He's not only her translator, but also her fiance—and works as one of the accompanists in her orchestra . . . Eddie Cantor: Bob Hope is breaking your Loew's State record. He's doing seven shows a day—first time in the history of Broadway

21 Physicians Will Be Arraigned In Federal Court

Faced with indictment for violation of antitrust laws, 21 prominent physicians will be arraigned in United States District Court Friday, June 14, it was learned yesterday.

The United States Supreme Court refused Monday to review the Court of Appeals' decision on a defense demurrer, clearing the way for a trial on its merits of the Government's criminal conspiracy case against organized medicine.

The physicians' indictment followed the fight of organized medicine against the Group Health Association. This is the first time the physicians have been arraigned to enter their pleas.

To set a definite trial date as well as to have the doctors enter their plea is the purpose of the arraignment. A trial is not probable before the fall, although the Department of Justice is pressing the matter.

Uniform Standards Urged by Briggs As Defense Step

Dr. Lyman J. Briggs, director of the National Bureau of Standards, Tuesday appealed to the States' weights and measures officials to strive for uniform regulations as a national defense measure.

Addressing the opening of the Thirtieth National Conference on Weights and Measures, of which he is president, Dr. Briggs emphasized the importance of achieving uniformity.

"In some totalitarian countries such uniformity is made mandatory through governmental edict," he told the 150 delegates assembled at the Bureau of Standards.

Less than a week ago, he said, he attended a technical conference on airplane development "in which it was said the mass production of steel in this country is seriously hampered by the multiplicity of types and kinds of steel demanded by the various industries."

The conference sessions will continue today at the Bureau of Standards.

BLENDED 33 TIMES TO MAKE ONE GREAT BEER

Pabst Blue Ribbon

ONLY BLUE RIBBON BRINGS TOGETHER THESE 33 SEPARATE BREWS . . . FOR UNVARYING GOODNESS!

IT'S blending that gives a certain coffee—a particular champagne—its own delicious flavor . . . and keeps it that way.

It's the same with Blue Ribbon. You'll never know how good beer can be until you try it. . . . For in every glass is a blend of not two, not five or ten . . . but 33 separate brews, from 33 separate kettles! Each brew is as fine as 96 years of skill, the 28 Pabst scientists and Pabst ingredients can make it. But brewing is a natural process, and Nature never yields two brews alike, even with the same formula, under strict scientific control.

That's why Pabst goes to so much extra work in blending 33 separate brews. Expensive? Of course. But that's what makes Blue Ribbon America's Premium Beer. Its smoothness is unique, its goodness never varies.

Sometime today, have the pleasure of meeting Blue Ribbon.

It's the BLEND that betters the Beer

Mr. Edison's Successor

When Secretary of the Navy Edison became the Democratic candidate for the Governorship of New Jersey, it was taken for granted that he would resign from President Roosevelt's Cabinet. The only element of surprise in his current announcement is that the effective date of his withdrawal has been postponed to June 24.

For a long time before Mr. Edison became Secretary of the Navy the responsibilities of that office fell largely upon his shoulders. He appears to have kept the Navy Department operating smoothly in spite of the President's delay, following the death of Secretary Swanson, in elevating him to a place in the Cabinet. In his present post he has contributed particularly to forwarding the Navy's shipbuilding program.

Considering Mr. Edison's political ambitions, however, his resignation itself becomes a contribution to the cause of national defense. This is no time for any man who is thinking of winning votes to occupy a vital position in our defense system. The Navy is our most important bulwark of national security. It follows that no position in the United States, except the Presidency and the office of Secretary of State, is of greater importance today than the Secretaryship of the Navy.

President Roosevelt has made a good beginning in assigning the technical problems of the defense program to experts. His Administration has rightly sought out industrial leaders who can be relied upon to mobilize the country's productive power for the efficient manufacture of essential weapons. But the task of these experts is to implement policies and carry out orders that must necessarily originate in the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. Edison's successor should be an executive of demonstrated capacity with a background of experience and information in naval affairs. He should be a man of imagination who can visualize our defense needs in the light of lessons from the present war. He should be a man who will command the respect and confidence of the Navy personnel, who can take full advantage of technical advice without losing the civilian viewpoint. Most of all he must be an organizing genius who can prepare the Navy for effective combat if that should become necessary.

In periods of international tranquillity politicians are frequently named to head both the War and Navy Departments. That policy always involves a large element of risk. In times of emergency it becomes imperative that all political considerations be swept aside and that the Navy be given the most capable and experienced administrator to be found in any industry or profession.

Amending The NLRA

If Congress is to adjourn before the Republican national committee meets on June 24, it has little time to amend the National Labor Relations Act. Yet the need for such adjustments is more acute now than it was when the Smith committee brought in its report.

The strong demand for changes in the act is indicated by the vote of 292 to 106 in favor of the rule which will bring the bill before the House today. No doubt there will be a great diversity of opinion as to what amendments shall be approved. But it appears that the Smith committee proposals have a much better chance of passage than the milder changes advocated by the labor committee.

This disposition to modify the act in the interests of fair play and efficient administration is all to the good. There is no ground whatever for the assumption that any alteration will necessarily vitiate the act and work to the disadvantage of labor.

Almost every important statute ever enacted, as Representative Bruce Barton points out, has been revised in the light of experience and changed conditions. Industry and science recognize changes resulting from experience as an essential part of progress. It will be a sad day for democracy if legislatures and administrative agencies fail to do likewise.

The danger is, of course, that amendments will be hastily approved without sufficient discrimination. That risk has been enhanced by the delay of the House in taking up the issue. Now the calendars of both houses are crowded by national defense measures and other bills calling for enactment before adjournment.

Fortunately, however, the proposed amendments have been much discussed and the Smith committee has made available an enormous amount of information regarding the NLRB. If the House passes a satisfactory bill without further delay, the Senate should make every effort to push it through to enactment.

Try For A Knockout

It was foreordained that Germany would strike, and strike furiously, along the line of the Somme River as soon as the capture of Dunkerque had finally obliterated Allied resistance in northern France.

At the moment, both the British and French armies are seriously disorganized. While the British, with the aid of a heroic rearguard action, were able to evacuate most of their expeditionary force, their loss of equipment has been staggering. Whether or not the vast stores of abandoned artillery, tanks and munitions have been rendered useless for the Germans, they are in any event lost to the Allies. It will, at best, be some days before another British army, adequately mechanized, can even begin to assemble for the aid of France.

The French loss of equipment, as well as men, has also been severe. But more disorganizing in this case has been the German seizure of one of the most highly industrialized sections of France. As a result it will take time for the ministry of war to reorganize its service of supply effectively. And time for that reorganization is what the Germans do not propose to allow.

The purpose of the German attack launched yesterday morning is, therefore, clear. It seeks to capitalize on an Allied weakness which is now at a maximum, but likely to grow less with every passing day. The latter will be the more true if the United States now does what its interests demand in the way of sending across the largest possible amount of equipment in the shortest possible time.

As distinct from its purpose, however, the strategy of this German drive should be closely watched. Present indications are that the preliminary objective may not be Paris at all, but a swing down the channel coast toward the great ports of Havre and even Cherbourg. Capture of these ports would render it even more difficult for Britain to send effective aid to her hard-pressed ally. And it would put the Germans in a position to attack all shipping along the south coast of England later.

Germany, in other words, is today putting everything into a gigantic effort to secure the basis for an eventual knockout of both Allies. It is vital to the Nazis, fully conscious of their latent weakness as well as the potential reserves of Allied strength, to deliver this crucial blow quickly.

It is at least equally vital for the French and British to throw every available resource into the breach. It is now or never for them. And it is now or never for the United States to supplement those resources. For if the Germans obtain the objective of their present drive, then American aid to France, at any rate, will be a humanitarian rather than a military issue.

This, too, is doubtless a part of Hitler's careful calculations.

A Test Of Democracy

International events have produced a strange atmosphere of quietude on the domestic political front in recent weeks. Political speeches have attracted very little attention. Enthusiasm for the forthcoming party conventions has been at low ebb. Seldom has the country approached the nominating period in our great political drama with so little evidence of partisan interest or activity.

It must not be supposed, however, that this seeming apathy will continue indefinitely. For the moment both Congress and the people are giving nonpartisan support to the rearmament program. When the necessary legislation has been voted, and the Republicans assemble in convention in Philadelphia less than three weeks hence, politics will come into its own. For the country will then be face to face with the problem of selecting a Chief Executive for the next four years.

It would be patently foolish to conclude that events in Europe or our own intensified need for national defense have minimized the importance of the nominating conventions. On the contrary, the crisis through which the world is passing has greatly magnified the momentous character of the decisions that will be made at Philadelphia in June and at Chicago in July.

As our national problems become more complicated, the need for wise leadership is immeasurably increased. Foreign policy, national defense, preparedness to meet the problems of peace that must arise in the wake of the present war and many other far-reaching issues will be affected in the most crucial manner by the choice of Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates and the molding of platforms a few weeks hence. No catastrophe abroad should divert thoughtful consideration from these problems.

Nor is it simply a question of leadership that must be decided. In this moment of triumph for militarism and totalitarian power the preservation of democracy in our own country is an issue of gigantic proportions. Once more the country is confronted by the dilemma which troubled Lincoln—the dilemma of maintaining a government that will be strong enough to be secure without encroaching upon the liberties of the people.

In such a period there can be no thought of relinquishing the normal processes of democratic government. It is well to remember that even during our own Civil War and in the period of excitement which preceded American entry into the World War elections were conducted in the traditional manner. Indeed, both of those critical periods brought forth spirited political contests of great significance.

Partisanship may well be kept at a minimum. This is not a time for political dog fights. Rather it is a time when genuine statesmanship should come to the fore. But this does not mean that any real issue should be soft-pedaled or that the campaign should be anything less than a clear-cut and soul-searching debate on the momentous issues of national policy demanding clarification.

Certainly this is no time for any weakening of either the principles or the machinery of democracy. On the contrary, the dominant note in the contest about to open will probably be the revitalization of democracy to meet the tests of a changing world.

Discretion Needed

Our good neighbors out Arlington way are exercised over the so-called fifth column menace, and with characteristic American enterprise have decided to do something about it.

At its meeting last Tuesday the Arlington County Civic Federation was reported as voting to set up a special "information bureau" composed of members whose duty it will be to give the authorities the names of all persons suspected of working to undermine the Government.

This action is obviously patriotic in its motivation. But what is meant by undermining the Government?

Is it espionage? If so, it can be suggested that any Arlington residents engaged in that nefarious occupation are much too wise to leave traces which amateur sleuths are likely to discover. Is it sabotage? There again the task of ferreting out the culprits is best left to a professional. Or is a fifth columnist merely one who happens to entertain unpopular views?

There is danger that any amateur "information bureau" set up to report on disloyalty will, if it functions at all, be largely a misinformation bureau. Long-standing grudges can be paid by covert accusations against those whom the informants may happen to dislike. A strange name, an unusual accent, an eccentricity of dress or habit, even an outspokenness in speech, might be enough to damn an individual.

And the FBI, which already has much to do, will be choked with "clues" not worth a penny a basket.

In view of what has happened in Norway and the Netherlands and other European nations it would be foolhardy to dismiss the "fifth column" menace in this, or any other country, as a phantasm. But the Federal authorities have or will soon secure, sufficient power to deal with it. For the average citizen, whether in Arlington or elsewhere, the highest patriotism now is to do one's normal duties extra well and not to cause confusion.

Faith and works are a commendable combination, but so often it is the case that a person with an abundance of faith is given the works.

"This is a pretty bad winter for these days an' times," says grandpa. "It's nearly as rough as some of our late springs used to be."

She says her permanent waves last six months. This may sound implausible, but she is the kind of girl who rarely shakes her head.

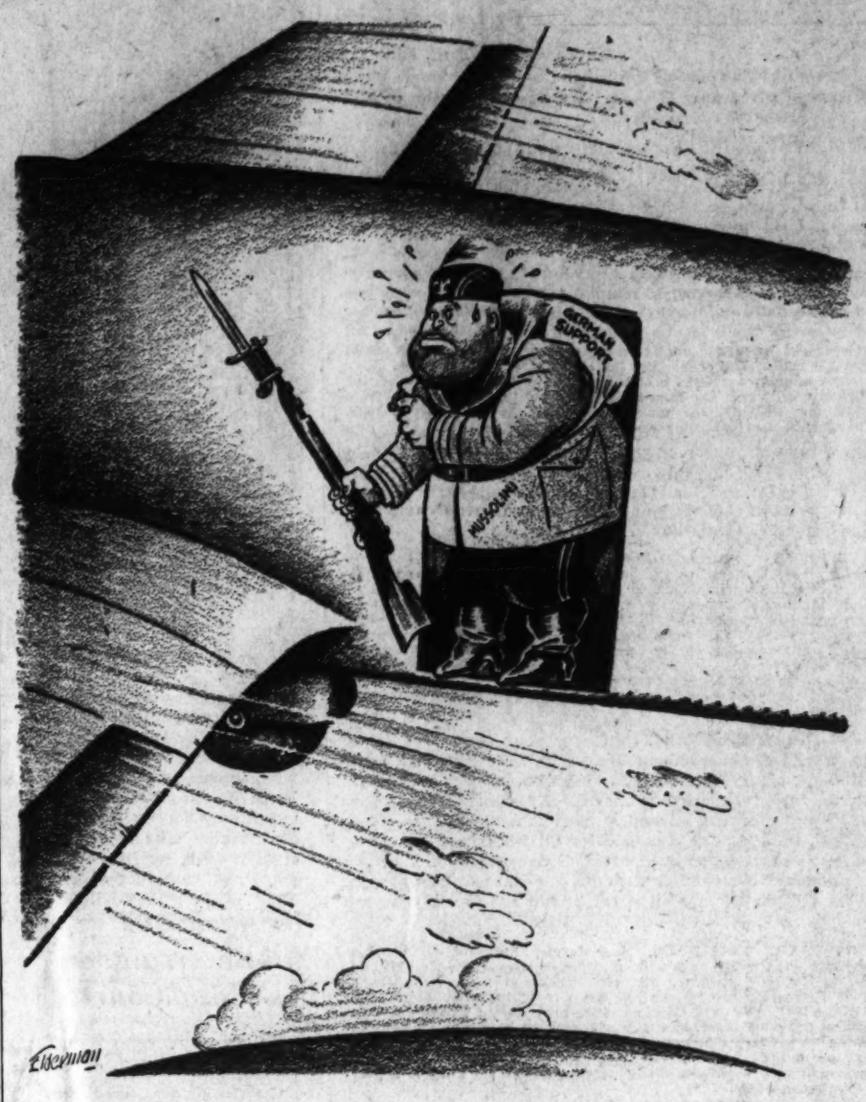

Street Car Stewardesses

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The dying trolley car is making an eleventh-hour effort to come back. Its newest effort to head off extinction appears in Atlantic City, where the management of an interurban line, taking a cue from the air lines, plans to install hostesses. Two uniformed girls will ride the cars, to supply newspapers and magazines for passengers, help women on and off at stops and otherwise look after people's comfort.

The plan sounds fine, and it would probably be approved unanimously by trolley passengers, but it would never work in St. Louis. Imagine a stewardess fighting her way through the densely packed crowd on a Delmar car at 5:15 to hand a picture magazine to a homeward-bound citizen, then line-plunging to the exit to assist a housewife in alighting from the car. Not that the passengers wouldn't appreciate these little attentions to lighten the rigors of trolley-riding, but the stewardesses would have to be sisters of Superman in order to do the job.

Letters To The Editor

All communications must carry the writer's name and address though pen names are permitted at the editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents brevity is requested. Letters are subject to condensation.

The British Fleet

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There has been much discussion about the fate of the British Fleet in case of an invasion of England. Newspaper correspondents as well as military experts ask whether Germany will demand the British Fleet as a ransom for not bombing the British Isles. They do not deem it necessary to consider that the British Fleet is the Empire Fleet and as such is subject to the orders of the members of that empire. Canada, Australia, South Africa, and New Zealand are all dominions of the empire whose laws and safety are just as important as that of England, Scotland and Wales. To give up the Empire Fleet would necessarily put these dominions with the possible exception of Canada under the sphere of influence of the two great naval powers of the Pacific and the Indian oceans, namely Japan and Italy.

If the British Isles were invaded and the people of those isles enslaved, would it not be better to transfer the entire fleet to the Southern Hemisphere in the Indian and Pacific oceans?

It would be better if the United States were to concentrate her diplomacy to persuade the British and dominion governments to cooperate and send the fleet to the Indian and Pacific oceans, there to protect the dominions and the Dutch East Indies and indirectly the shores of western South America than to try to protect those members of the empire who are so close to Europe that their safety is jeopardized. With this done the United States Navy could police the North and South Atlantic without any qualm over what is going on in the Pacific.

Youth Congress

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Last week an announcement was made by a Communist member student, during our evening class session, with the purpose of collecting sufficient funds to be represented at the closing session of the first New York Youth Congress, attended by Mrs. Roosevelt, held on May 26. Understand, the desire for this representation through the Communists was not at the consent of the entire class, but at the wish of those in favor of this student's particular views and efforts.

The next night we had to hear this same student take 15 minutes of our class time to express his views of the results of the session—i. e., that we as peace loving people, should oppose the Government's defense program and the desire of those whose chief purpose is to protect investments of a few in Europe and the Far East—that we should fight for peace, for jobs, for labor and for that everlasting "civil liberties." I have yet to find a Communist give the interpretation of "civil liberties."

Did our instructor feel he was sparing us the effort to read the true facts in the newspapers? Is it the mistake of an instructor, or the mistake of our school system, or the reluctance of our Government to make prompt and thorough investigation of Communists' activities? While I believe and hope a great many of us are in favor of rushing such investigations of all especially vulnerable points, should we not include our schools, where Communism seems to be growing from the ground up—where young students, for the want of activity and perhaps unaware of Communists' movements, join with them?

'Too Late'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a young man of military age and a member of the District National Guard, I have been deeply interested in and very much concerned with the recent foreign policy of the Roosevelt Administration. Today American sentiment is about 90 per cent against our participation in the European war, yet there is a definite trend of the Administration to make the Nation conscious that our entry into war is inevitable. Recent speeches of Administration spokesmen, statements from the White House, and the syndicated writings of American columnists, all are directed in the same vein.

Many military and political experts here fear that it is now too late to prevent Nazi domination of Western Europe, and that it would be exceedingly futile and costly to us, both in money and manpower, to try to give military aid to France and England at this dark moment.

Our task is clear, we must fortify and strengthen our defenses, build up an effective air fleet, and eliminate "fifth column" activities and elements in our midst, so that in the near future "no foreign navy will dare to approach within bombing range of our coasts," as Col. Lindbergh remarked.

A PATRIOTIC AMERICAN.
Washington, May 25.

Fundamental Defense

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the President actually feels that "national spirit and morale" contribute to national defense, he is taking strange steps to assure the foundations of a democratic and protected Nation. The President has cried out against war profiteers, but he has done nothing to prevent their development; he has cried out against the high cost of living, but the city worker remains jobless or underpaid; he has cried out against a fifth column, but he is doing much to create conditions of discontent and dictatorship.

The needed reforms of the WPA and New Deal are to be scrapped for hysteria and war. Walter Kotsching, who witnessed the rise of the Nazis, writes: "In Germany the 40,000 or 50,000 workless university graduates in 1931-33 became, together with unemployed subalterns of the old imperial army, the spearhead of the National Socialist movement. In Hitler, himself a product of life as a down-and-out in the slums of Vienna, they found a man after their own heart . . . He depicted Germany as a country of 'havenots' and called upon German youth to join him in his crusades against the 'haves.'"

We cannot unite a nation by munition plants and hysterical appeals to defend something we do not have—democracy and unity. The cultural projects of the WPA were helping to sell America to Americans, were tearing down the false barriers of sections and States, developing native skills, and were introducing the people and culture of one region to the people of another.

We will not fight for war profiteers—we will fight only for a Government and cause that can use our talents. The Fifth Column is built by the despondent and jobless—it conquers by numbers and despair.

DISILLUSIONED.
Alexandria, May 28

Answer To Mr. Pegler

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many and many times Westbrook Pegler's pungent remarks have appeared in The Washington Post against Italy, its people, its immigrants and the Italo-American citizens and their descendants, simply because he does not like the idea of Mussolini's association with Hitler and not with England and France.

His dislike of Mussolini is no reason for him to defame the good, honest and hard-laboring Americanized Italian immigrants and their progeny.

He said that the Italian press and the Italo-American press are constantly reviling and abusing the American people. This is absolutely wrong, because the Italian press and the Italo-American press have been forced to answer to the continuous insults published in some of the American press attacking the Italians mercilessly without reasonable cause.

Approximately, the Italian immigrants in the United States are 5,500,000. Two-thirds of these are abiding naturalized American citizens, and their progeny, amounting to about 12,000,000, are properly raised at home and educated in American elementary and high schools and a great number are attending colleges and universities, also military, naval and aviation schools. They are and will be abiding citizens of the United States.

FRANK FABRIZIO.
Washington, May 26.

The Serious Side

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With due regard to the lighter side of life, it seems to me nevertheless that Mr. Harlan Miller indulged in excessive levity with respect to patriotism in his "The Colonel Views With Alarm" on May 29.

The imaginary colonel isn't really funny and what he has to say about modern youth is more pertinent to the conditions of the day than the smart wisecracks of the columnists. The dead hand of Mencken's hedonism parading behind a screen of sophisticated intellectualism has done much more harm to the world than Mr. Miller cares to believe. There is time and place for everything, even the wisdom of columnists. Perhaps there was a time to take a crack at insincere flag waving in the years past, but the day for cheap, sophomoric cynicism is long past.

This country, no less than the rest of the world, is confronted with crucial days. Playing down the serious issues facing us and the necessity for sacrifice to meet the approaching menace at this particular moment is hardly to the point.

The showdown is much nearer than is believed by those who "want to live forever in their playsuits." If this country will not have enough men and women who "hate tyrants" and are "ready to die for freedom" there will be many more living forever in concentration camp uniforms than in playsuits. R. S.
Washington, June 3.

The Dies Committee

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the Dies Committee would devote its time and attention to something that is real, instead of imaginary, there might be some excuse for the money the committee is spending.

Real matters that the committee should investigate and expose to the public are ignored. The Constitution of the United States is being constantly violated, even by those in high authority who have taken a solemn oath to abide by that sacred instrument. State legislatures are being influenced to appropriate public money for unconstitutional purposes, and Governors of States are signing bills so enacted.

It is time for Congress to cease appropriating public funds for fake purposes. That sort of thing has gone far enough.

JOHN S. MORAN.
Washington, May 22.

The Post Impressionist

The Lost Prince

One of the advantages of being on the spot and taking a peek behind the scenes is that one obtains a measure of the falsity which is dished up to the newspaper-reading public as fact. Take King Leopold, for instance. Before I left America to visit the neutral countries I looked up what had been said in the last couple of years about the young King. And I saw how one magazine after another had lauded Leopold for his strength without mentioning his weakness or the source of it. What I found in talking in the Low Countries with folk who knew all about him, however, belied the adulators. Leopold was considered a pathetic victim of his heredity and his circumstances.

Hammer blows certainly have descended in plenty upon the young Belgian monarch. He was a member of what Anthony Eden calls the "lost generation." That is, he was one of the young men who survived the last ordeal at arms. In Belgium, as in all the "belligerent countries," their ranks were decimated. That is one of the reasons that Britain is today governed by older men. Leadership in Britain, as somebody said, is under the sod of Flanders Field. (What of the present generation struggling in a repetition of the same carnage?) and in Belgium the shortage of 40-year-olders has been felt quite as grievously in all departments of life.

Leopold in 1914, when the Kaiser's legions came rampaging over Belgium, was a tall, overgrown youngster of 13. One recalls the pictures of the lad in the sailor suit clinging to his mother's arm in those early years. But the prince saw action before the year was out. At 13 years and 5 months he had been enrolled as a private in the Belgian army. In those stern years he showed plenty of pluck and determination.

It has been said that a constitutional monarch is not a King until he is first a man. Leopold became a man while he was yet a child, but he had the agony of seeing his country overrun, despite the heroic resistance of the Belgian army. Leopold went to England with an unboylike gravity in his demeanor which came from his war experience. In exile he grew up. The war, coupled with the strangeness of his surroundings, occupied his thought to the exclusion of his studies. Without avail he sought to go back to the battlefield.

Still he did his vacationing from Eton in the trenches. Not much of an upbringing for a boy in his early teens! At last the conflict was over, with Leopold still only 17, and the prince went back to a country which had been partly desolated. On every side he saw evidence of the casualties of war. In the years of reconstruction he tried to keep at the side of his father, but without success.

For the good Albert had become almost a recluse, at least a melancholiac. Over days at a time he used to go climbing in the upper silences of the mountains. What ailed Albert was his fear that again he would have to see Belgium go through another 1914. There seems to be no doubt in the Low Countries that Albert in the mountaining accident which overtook him in 1934 chose not to live through Belgium's tragedy again.

Leopold felt the loss of his father very deeply, and mourned, too, the ungovernable grief of his mother, a member of the family that produced Otto of Bavaria. He himself lived more aloof. Then occurred an event which was the final hammer blow to haunt his memory. He and his lovely Swedish wife were in an automobile accident in which she sustained fatal injuries. Leopold himself had been at the wheel, and he has since suffered from the gnawing feeling that he was guilty, I am told. Many times at state dinners his guests have been embarrassed by his long and brooding abstractions.

Tragedy back of him and tragedy in front of him! Leopold saw the Nazi menace in the distance, coming slowly and inexorably over the same way that it had trodden in 1914. With Albert he was affrighted at the thought of another overrun Belgium. If neutrality could save Belgium, then Belgium must be neutral, and he and the government sought to keep out of trouble along this path. That meant that though Leopold knew where danger lay, he refused to permit any staff talks with either Britain or France. Leopold chose—isolation! Isolation for the old satellite state!

But the blow finally came. And Britons and Frenchmen, without any knowledge of Belgian defense strategy, rushed into the breach on Leopold's invitation. Maybe the subsequent Nazi break-through into France would not have taken place but for this Allied move into Belgium. Now the Allies are suffering from a second handicap in the King's capitulation. The King doubtless couldn't face the dreary repetition of the desolation and carnage of his youth. His case is one for pity rather than blame. This Hamlet who said "Belgium is more than a financial concern; Belgium is a moral entity," would have been a great King with a happier background.

Federal Spending

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am a stockholder in a corporation which for the past seven years has continuously lost money. It has made vast expenditures that do not seem to have been adequately accounted for. This spendthrift corporation does not come under any regulatory or investigating body such as the Security and Exchange Commission. It is not called upon to give an accounting to its owners, yet are not the president and officers of all corporations required to give an accounting of their stewardship?

The corporation in which I am a stockholder is the United States Government. The stockholders are the people, the taxpayers both large and small. The head of this corporation is the President of the United States. In the past seven years the public debt has risen from $22,000,000,000 to $42,000,000,000. The taxpaying stockholders have a right to know where this money has gone. The President of the United States stands before these taxpayers and voters, not as a third-term candidate, but as the head of a great corporation called to strict account for his stewardship during the past seven years. Why U. S. Is Arming

By Mark Sullivan

The Reason And The Purpose

THIS NATION IS ABOUT to make a decision. What the decision will be is practically determined. Practically, the thing is done.

There are still some who do not see, or who, seeing imperfectly, are not fully convinced. To them is due the consideration of explaining just why America makes this decision.

Start with the plainest fact in the scene. America is arming itself. That is the plainest fact in the scene. It is also the least disputed policy. That we should arm in conceded, practically without dissent.

Very well, we arm. For what reason do we arm? What caused us to arm?

To that question, the answer lies in a date: On May 10 Germany marched into Holland, Belgium and France. And six days later, President Roosevelt went before Congress. He told Congress and the country that America is in danger. Congress agreed. Congress, with only one dissenting vote in both Houses, 1 out of 531—Congress voted to arm.

So the reason we arm is plain. We arm because Germany is coming in our direction—and because she is not stopped by the countries which stand between her and us. In spite of superbly heroic effort, France and England do not hold Germany back.

That is the reason America arms. It is the sole reason. Never was any reason, for any action, so plain and so uncomplex. We arm because there is danger that Germany may conquer England and France. If that danger did not exist, we would not arm. If that danger disappeared, if the Allies won against Germany, we would stop arming. We are arming for the sole reason that there is danger of Germany conquering the Allies.

THAT IS THE REASON we arm.

Next, for what purpose do we arm—purpose is a thing slightly different from reason. What do we expect to do with our arms?

We arm for the purpose, and the sole purpose, of defending ourselves against certain consequences that would follow German victory. We arm against German possession of the British fleet, against German possession of the present rights of Britain in Canada; against German possession of British West Indies islands, close to our shores and the Panama Canal; against German menace to us by way of Latin America.

In short, we arm for one purpose and reason only. We arm to prevent consequences which would follow German victory over the Allies.

Now, if we arm to prevent the consequences of a thing, would we not better arm to prevent the thing itself from happening?

Can we not prevent the thing, more quickly and more safely and more cheaply than we can thereafter prevent the consequences of the thing?

To prevent the thing (assuming it is not too late to do that) would take one brief, gigantic exertion of effort. But to prevent the consequences of the thing, after it has happened, would take years of constant defense, generations of defense. To prevent the consequences of the thing, after it has happened, would compel us to maintain, for indefinite years to come, an immense army, an immense navy, an immense air force, constant universal conscription.

THIS BRINGS US to the decision we must make, which we have practically made.

The best way for America to arm itself is to arm the Allies. For an airplane built to defend America there is one best place. An American airplane delivered to the Allies, used in Europe to prevent German victory, is of infinitely greater service to us than the same airplane kept in America. And the same as to ships and armament and every sort of war supply.

ADOLF HITLER
Why We Arm

True, there is some risk that the Allies, even with our help, may not prevent Germany from winning. Even after giving maximum help to the Allies, we may later have to defend ourselves. To that, the answer is that by using our factories now to make arms for the Allies we shall get our factories speeded up into quantity production, so that if and when we must defend ourselves we shall have an abundant, flowing supply.

The reasons so far stated, for America helping the Allies, are put upon the ground of our own self-interest solely. They omit all motives of sympathy or other emotion. In pure reason, pure practicality, the best way to defend ourselves is to help defend the Allies.

There will be many Americans—and they will be the best among us—who wish to help the Allies for motives of sentiment. They are abundantly justified. For them there are two pictures, each sufficient.

ONE IS THE PICTURE of Germany ruthlessly invading neutral countries, Denmark, Norway, Holland, Belgium; descending upon them by stealth and force—brutally murdering many of their inhabitants, terrorizing all. That America should be excited by that, that we should help to resist, prevent and punish it, is the most elevated tradition America has.

There is another picture, even more poignant. In large parts of Europe today are persons cruelly uprooted, refugees in terrified flight. Their flight is all in one direction, toward one haven. All flee to France and England. No one sees any refugees going toward Germany. No one thinks of Germany as a place of mercy and succor. All think of Germany as the negation of mercy, the source of cruelty.

That, if America is still America, is a sufficient reason for the decision we are making.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Under False Colors

THE COMMUNISTS and their common-law comrades in the Moscow conspiracy against the form and substance of the American Government have hit upon a device to prevent the American press from naming in print, for the information of the public, members of the Communist Party and fellow-travelers. The party rolls are secret, and members who prefer to conceal their allegiance to Joseph Stalin may use fictitious names. The fellow-travelers serve the party in the guise of liberals and radicals. The Communists admit these deceptions, explaining that they might be barred from employment if they sailed under Stalin's colors—which is another way of saying that they disguise themselves like Hitler's parachutists, attired in the garb of priests and peasant women, in order to penetrate American offices and plants. These offices and plants, of course, include Government offices and plants which will now be engaged in the manufacture of the tools and weapons of national defense.

The threat of libel action is the new weapon by which the conspirators are trying to forestall public identification. Libel is a great nuisance to publishers and is scrupulously avoided, but problems arise in which a paper or magazine safely avoids the threat of a libel action only by defaulting the obligation which accompanies the privilege of a free press. The Communists, particularly in journalism, where they control the newspaper guild, are familiar with the problems, and their method of intimidating the American press is to threaten to claim libel.

NOW, IT IS to be hoped that if some Communist goes through with such an action the defendant will fight the case to the end, so that it may be established whether it is libelous to point out the significance of certain conduct and associations by individuals or to say that an individual is a member of a legally constituted political party. Men who defend communism and the party claim, nevertheless, that it would be libelous to identify them with communism or the party.

The party, as of the present writing, has legal status, and under the American Constitution, whose protection the Communists and fellow-travelers invoke the better to work for its destruction, any man has a legal right to believe in and preach communism. These facts being so, where is the libel? And if it be true that a man with a long record of membership in the Republican Party, and of public abhorrence for communism can be injured by a plainly false accusation of this kind, does it follow that equal injury is suffered by a man who constantly associates himself with Communist Party projects and diligently pursues the party line?

NOBODY IS LIKELY to accuse Robert Taft, for instance, of being a Communist or fellow-traveler. But a man who has played ball with the Communists, attended their meetings, promoted their projects and fought everything which they oppose would not be in the same position. It is a public service to identify avowed Communists and to unmask those who hold secret membership or go along as fellow-travelers. If a man finds the Communists to be congenial and reveals a sympathy with communism, on what ground can he allege that he has been injured by the publication of matter which identifies him with his friends and the ism which brings them together? It will be noticed that rarely are individuals called Communists or classified as believers in communism unless they have openly declared themselves. The alternative is to show an individual's association with the party's affairs and workers and reveal by his own actions a sympathy with the party line. The public draws its own conclusions.

It is conceivable that even though the party and the belief enjoy legal status in this free country, an individual wrongfully identified with the movement might suffer the loss of his job or certain friendships. On the other hand, it is plainly apparent that the Communists run with the hare and hunt with the hounds and that the public, more so now than at any other time, needs information which will permit it to draw conclusions and groups. As long as the party enjoys legal status and individuals are free to believe in communism and work for it, it would seem that there is no libel.

Quibbling In Defense

Is Voluntary Cooperation Enough?

IS THE NATIONAL defense program going to be sabotaged by quibbling between various groups within the Administration, between industry and labor, between industry and government? Will existing differences of opinion over the best methods to be employed delay the Nation's arming? Is voluntary cooperation enough to accomplish the task laid down by President Roosevelt and approved by practically the entire Nation? Are we headed toward the same sort of fumbling that featured the British program of rearmament?

The answers to these questions must be determined by the evolution of the National Defense Advisory Commission and the degree of forcefulness which Mr. Roosevelt chooses to employ in his present role as final arbiter of defense coordination problems.

But there are valid reasons for asking these questions at the present time. For the national defense picture already is clouded by the following disturbing factors:

1. A fundamental difference of opinion within the Administration as to how the whole field of industrial mobilization should be administered.

2. Interdepartmental jealousy over supervision of the vitally important aircraft and machine tool industries.

3. Widely divergent opinions on labor policies as they apply to the defense program.

4. Two schools of thought as to whether the program can be achieved through voluntary cooperation and by normal peacetime democratic methods preserving all the principles of free competitive enterprise, or whether some less democratic but more efficient system of control must be established.

CONTROVERSY over the first point goes back to the creation of the War Resources Board by President Roosevelt last September. This board made a study of the War and Navy departments' industrial mobilization plan, reported to the President and was disbanded. But its mere creation brought forth a howl of alarm from isolationist quarters on Capitol Hill and from the so-called "left wing" of the New Deal. The first group screamed that the Roosevelt Administration was leading the Nation to war and the other was shocked at the implications of the industrial mobilization plan, which represents the idea of most officials of the War and Navy departments of how the country should be run in wartime.

These officials would call in outsiders in time of war or preparation against imminent war and give them complete control and absolute authority. A group of super-agencies, headed up by the War Resources Administration, would, with the President, rule the country. Its membership would be made up of private individuals working in liaison with Government departments, bureaus and agencies. They would control practically every important function of every citizen and run a virtually airtight dictatorship.

The argument in favor of such a system is that many of the major problems of war are industrial problems and should be handled by industrialists. The contention also is advanced that the temporary super-agencies could be abandoned immediately after the war.

IN DIRECT OPPOSITION to this line of reasoning is the so-called left-wing group. To these officials the industrial mobilization plan amounts to turning over the country lock, stock and barrel to a coterie of economic royalists. They contend that since the industrial mobilization plan was first drawn up the Federal Government, under the New Deal, has expanded vastly its fields of activity, that Government officials have obtained wide experience in the very subjects that would have to be dealt with in time of war and that wartime activities should be carried out as nearly as possible by existing Government departments and agencies.

Presumably it was the opposition of this group that led Mr. Roosevelt to appoint the advisory commission instead of recalling the War Resources Board.

On the second point, there is a more-or-less silent disagreement between the War and Navy departments on the one hand and the Treasury Department on the other as to who should supervise the expansion of the aircraft and machine tool industries. This controversy dates back to late last year when Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau was appointed by President Roosevelt to coordinate foreign and domestic aircraft purchases. Although there was considerable jealousy in the service departments at that time, the controversy later was smoothed over and the two departments worked together amicably.

When the question of new and greater expansion of the aircraft and machine tool industries came up in connection with the national defense program, however, Mr. Morgenthau again was placed in charge of this work and again certain officials of the War and Navy departments were nettled. War and Navy officials would go the whole way in meeting the requests of the manufacturers in the fields of labor policies and tax exemptions, while the Treasury would treat all industries alike on tax matters and would adhere strictly to labor and profit limitation laws.

IN RESPECT to the third point—labor policies—the War and Navy departments are again on one side of the fence and officials of the Labor Department and other elements of the Administration on the other. No one can be found who will disagree with Mr. Roosevelt's opinion that the defense program should be carried out with a view to effecting just as much reemployment as possible. But the real labor problem in the defense industries is not one of finding men but of finding skilled men. This is a matter on which it is extremely difficult to get concrete information that will not be challenged by one quarter or another, but several facts seem clear:

1. During the depression apprentice training programs were neglected, with the result that very few workers have been schooled during the past ten years in such lines as tool making.

2. A machine tool worker requires from two to four years before he acquires an acceptable degree of skill.

3. A huge expansion of the machine tool industry is imperative and there certainly will be more jobs than there are trained workers.

In these circumstances some well-informed persons contend that the entire program will be seriously delayed unless workers in certain industries put in more hours per week than they do today.

THE FINAL POINT—whether the program can be carried out through voluntary cooperation—is widely debated and the proponents of neither argument can be classified by Government departments, occupations or politics. Mr. Roosevelt seems to have charted a middle course between those who want it done under existing conditions, principles and laws and those who are clamoring for a centralized agency backed by complete power to enforce its decisions. He has set up the mechanism for a central authority but has given it no power.

It is possible that Mr. Roosevelt is experimenting with the advisory commission. Perhaps he wants to give it a few weeks to see whether it can bring about the absolutely essential amount of coordination with the voluntary assistance of everyone involved or whether sterner measures are required.

But experts are convinced, for instance, that the huge aircraft expansion called for cannot be attained unless some authority, acting either through delegated authority or through consent, achieves complete coordination by alloting a fixed percentage of the output of the machine tool industry to the aviation and engine plants; prevents the bidding up of raw material prices; guarantees the delivery of the required materials to the plants that are ready to use them; standardizes planes and motors and tells what factory to work on what models; decides how long labor must work, and make other vital decisions and sees to it they are carried out.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Towards A Peace With Peace

ALTHOUGH THE ATTENTION of the Americas is fixed upon Europe, they must never forget that the American continents are a great island set amidst the oceans of the world. On the west the ocean washes the coasts of Asia and of the island empires of the east.

The only navy which the American hemisphere possesses is now in the western ocean. In that same ocean there is the Japanese navy. As between the United States and Japan, two nations which have never been at war, there has developed in recent years a growing opposition of policies, interests, and diplomatic principle. Their relationship today is obviously unstable. The naval treaty has lapsed. The commercial treaty has been abrogated. In respect to China the two countries have taken positions which are in theory irreconcilable. In respect to the Netherlands Indies their public declarations promising respect for the status quo are ambiguous, and in the light of conceivable developments, exceedingly precaricus.

TO PUT THE MATTER more plainly, the two countries confront each other across the vast expanses of the Pacific, each having taken a position where untoward circumstances or an uncalculated overt act might plunge both of them into a prolonged and exhausting struggle. In such a struggle neither Japan nor the United States would be serving its vital interests. Both nations would be sacrificing them. The Japanese, already suffering from the Chinese war, would by engaging and exhausting themselves still further make themselves vulnerable to the only great power, namely Russia, which can strike by land and by sea and by air at the very heart of the Japanese Empire. The United States, by drifting into such a war, would be engaging the Navy for years to come in a confused and indecisive campaign on the other side of our world; yet at that very moment the security of the American continents may require the use of the whole Navy to guard those strategic points in the Atlantic Ocean which must be held if this hemisphere is to be defended.

It is now a kind of suicidal madness for the two nations to contemplate even the possibility of letting the existing tension and the existing conflicts of interest and principle develop into a war. For in such a war both would be sacrificing much greater principles than they were upholding and both would be jeopardizing fatally interests which are infinitely more important than those they were defending.

SOME, PERHAPS, will feel that to express this candid view of Japanese-American relations is to display a deplorable weakness at a time when only strength and firmness are good currency in international affairs. I do not think it is weakness to make the plain truth the basis of national policy. The Japanese know their own strength and their own weaknesses and they know our strength and our weaknesses; and we know the same of them and of ourselves. Neither they nor we can afford to bluff. Neither we nor they can afford to provoke the other. This is the truth. And on the truth we shall both do well to found our policies.

Lest this opinion be ascribed to a sudden fear engendered by the critical state of Europe, I hope I may be pardoned for saying that many of us have held and expressed this view for a long time, ever since the outbreak of the European war was manifestly inevitable. For it has been clear to us that whatever our sympathies and interests in the Far East, a great European war for the domination of the western world would affect directly and vitally the security and the independence of this hemisphere. We have held that, by comparison, our interests in the Far East would prove to be secondary, however important they might under more normal circumstances appear to be. We have, therefore, held that it was perilous and in the highest degree unstatesmanlike to let develop an irreconcilable conflict with Japan, to conceal from ourselves the immense gravity of such a conflict, to exacerbate the tension by threats and by declarations that are too absolute to be negotiable.

WE HAVE HELD THAT THIS provocative attitude was downright folly especially at a time when the country was doped and duped by a notion of "neutrality" in Europe which might compel it to stand by and risk the collapse of Allied sea power. We have argued that the policy of the majority of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate during the month of July a year ago was a classic example of how misguided men can imperil the security of a nation.

For in that fatal month the committee challenged Japan in the Pacific by supporting, and even by inciting to, the abrogation of the commercial treaty, and by brandishing the threat of an embargo; in the very same weeks when it was proposing to risk war with Japan, the same committee was refusing to lift the embargo on the sale of arms to the Allies on the ground that what happened to them was no concern of ours. It was a most awful case of not letting your right hand know what your left hand is doing, an almost incredible case of being blindly provocative in one ocean and blindly supine in the other ocean. And unhappily the Administration, which knew better, acquiesced in this utterly unstatesmanlike policy of challenging Japan in Asia while we were forbidden to support the Allies in Europe.

THE SITUATION today is, of course, worse than it was then. But still the fundamental interests involved are the same. It is still true that Japan and the United States have nothing to gain and a very great deal to lose by going to war—or even by standing opposed as if they might be going to war. It is still true that our interests in the Far East are secondary to our interests in this hemisphere: because this is true, it follows that there is no conflict between Japan and the United States which is not reconcilable by diplomacy. We should, therefore, recognize this truth and should, I submit, enter immediately into friendly and conciliatory and candid negotiations with the Japanese for the avowed purpose of preserving peace in the Pacific.

This is not a time for bluffing and this is not a time for indulging that false pride which causes men to cling to an untenable position. We know that we must defend our security and our very independence in this hemisphere and in the Atlantic Ocean. We know that Japan has a greater interest in Asia than we have. Let us recognize the fact. On the other hand, the Japanese position in the Far East is at least as difficult as is our position in the Western Hemisphere. Japan is at war with China. Japan has Soviet Russia for her nearest neighbor. Her commerce with this hemisphere is of critical importance to the standard of life of the Japanese people.

In these considerations there are the essential elements of a negotiation which might lead through a new commercial treaty to a political understanding based on the principle that the European war, which is also a European revolution, is not to be extended to the Pacific. We should aim high and aim far—at a new order of things in the Pacific in which, having adjusted our secondary conflicts, the two navies will cease to confront each other as potential antagonists and will be free to maintain order and stability in their respective spheres of influence.

I HAVE NO WAY of knowing whether the Japanese nation will respond to such a change of American policy. My belief is that they might, that they do not regard themselves as our enemies, that they respect the power we are capable of developing and that the best of the Japanese leaders and the mass of the Japanese people desire peace with the United States. Even if this is not the fact, we shall never, I believe, regret having tried wholeheartedly to preserve the peace in half the world.

Books And Things

Listening Is A Talent

"CARSON M'CULLERS is a 22-year-old girl who was born and brought up in Georgia and is now married and living in North Carolina:" That is all the publishers have to say about the author of "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter" (Houghton, $2.50). She is 22, and she can write. She will write better books than "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter."

For this is a strange and uneven book, at times almost miraculous in its concise intensity, at times baffling in its meandering immaturity. The story seems to revolve about a deaf mute, Mr. Singer, and a group of fantastic lost souls who found peace in talking to his silent attentiveness. Mr. Singer was himself a lonely soul, since his companion, Mr. Antonapoulos, another deaf mute, had been removed to an insane asylum. He used to talk, but he saw in the faces of his hearers that his speech was thick and strange, so he established himself in silence, writing such messages as he cared to convey. He wrote little; but he provided what most men need: An audience. He was interested in listening—if you can call lip-reading "listening."

Biff Brannon, proprietor of the New York Cafe, enjoyed Mr. Singer's custom; Biff himself was something of a listener. He enjoyed even drunken, windy, world-saving Jake Blount, who sometimes slept on Mr. Singer's spare cot. And Mr. Singer was the only white man who had the confidence of Benedict Mady Copeland, the Negro doctor who thought too much about his race's troubles. Finally, in his silent way, he seemed to understand Mick Kelly, who first appears in Mrs. McCullers' pages as a gangling towheaded girl of 12, dressed in khaki shorts, a blue shirt and tennis shoes. These are Carson McCuller's major characters; and it is her achievement that you see them, and feel you know them, even if you are not quite sure what she intended to have them symbolize, or, indeed, whether she herself was ever sure what her book, as a whole, was intended to convey.

IT IS MICK, the gangling girl who was 5 foot 6 before she donned skirts, who smoked cigarettes in the hope of stunting her growth, who dominates the book. You will not forget Mick sitting atop the neighbor's new rooftop thinking of the music she had heard over the radio and loudly directing her young brother in his stewardship of the baby down below; or Mick's intuitive understanding of her brother's course of action, after the gun went off, or her frail, fumbling introduction to love with Harry Minowitz.

Tariff Increase On Corn Imports To Be Sought

The Agriculture Department indicated yesterday it would ask the Tariff Commission to raise import barriers against foreign corn.

Officials said they had learned that upwards of 500,000 bushels of Argentine corn had been contracted for delivery to Pacific Coast ports this month.

The grain was sold subject to the existing import duty of 25 cents a bushel. Officials explained that inasmuch as American corn prices were considerably above world levels, Argentine shippers apparently could pay the duty and still come out ahead.

The Tariff Commission has authority to impose import quotas on competitive farm products. Such quotas, already in effect on cotton, virtually close the doors of American markets to foreign commodities involved.

Officials emphasized that the United States had a surplus of corn and that consequently there was no need for importing the grain.

Munitions Maker May Buy Idle Unit Of Carnegie Steel

New York June 5 (AP).—The Wall Street Journal in a dispatch from Philadelphia says Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, a U. S. Steel Corporation subsidiary, is negotiating with a company known as Empire Ordnance for sale of Carnegie's Pencoyd, Pa., Plant.

Idle for several years, the 14 acre Pencoyd unit was described as "adaptable for armament production."

Interests active in Empire Ordnance, the financial newspaper added, included Harry C. Cushing, vice president of the investment firm of E. H. Rollins & Sons, and Elisha Walker of the Wall Street investment banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

The Pencoyd plant has ten basic open hearth furnaces with a capacity for producing 216,000 tons of steel ingots a year. Finishing departments include a blooming mill, three structural mills and a bar mill. In addition the plant has capacity for 170,000 tons of hot rolled steel products, 3,200 tons of steel castings and steel, brass and bronze foundries.

Ore Ship Sailors Tell of Dash From Narvik in Hail of Bombs

Nazi air bombs and dum-dum machine gun bullets fell in showers about the Olaf Bergh, Norwegian iron ore ship which dashed from Narvik as the Germans arrived, officers and crew members said on docking in Baltimore yesterday.

Apparently warned of the impending German invasion, Capt. Gustav Steinler took his ship out of the port so fast he pulled a cleat off the dock.

Boatswain Gaarder Trygve, a grizzled viking, said approximately 50 bombs fell near the ship during a 30-day hideout in the foggy fjords after the dash from Narvik.

Although 30 waves of German planes bombed and machine-gunned the heavily loaded vessel, none of the 29 officers or crew members was injured, he added.

After its hurried flight from Narvik, the Olaf Bergh went to Hagstadt for safety. There, officers and crew hid among the rocks of the hills and slept in a boathouse loaned them by the harbor master.

Trygve joined with Mate Ole Kleppevik in denouncing the Nazi attacks, especially one bombing thrust at Hagstadt when it "seemed the whole hill was coming down."

After hiding in the fjords, the Olaf Bergh slipped out of Norwegian waters May 15 and voyaged unconvoyed across the Atlantic to Baltimore. During the crossing it was unmolested and, ironically, spotted only one plane—a Belgian.

Capt. Steinler told Public Health Service and Immigration officials his men wanted to be paid off so they could go back and fight the Germans.

"You know," he added, "I am supposed to take 15 per cent in taxes from the $8 a month cash pay, but I'm damned if I'll do it if the money goes to the Germans."

He said he had no information on where his ship would go next, but expressed gratification he had gotten the vessel crew and ore cargo safely from Narvik to Baltimore.

Three other ships, also on the regular run from Narvik to Baltimore, were sunk by German bombs before they could follow the Olaf Bergh from the Norwegian harbor, he said.

Veterans of '18 Offer Services To Army but Are Rejected

They've seen one war, but they're ready for another if their country should need them.

They are doughboys of 1918 who, District Army recruiting officers reported yesterday, are coming in "by the droves" to offer their services again.

They've been volunteering on an average of 10 or 12 a day since President Roosevelt sounded the call for an army of 280,000 men, said Technical Sergt. Norman W. Morgan, acting first sergeant of the local recruiting station.

And still they come, many of them convinced the United States will be compelled to defend itself and anxious to be the first to take up arms against the enemy.

But Uncle Sam doesn't want them. He wants young men, none over 35 years of age. So the veterans of the first World War, disgruntled, are turned away.

However, the young men of America likewise are answering the call to arms, and Sergt. Morgan reported applications had "practically doubled" since the campaign for a larger army got under way May 20. He said the local station, which covers Washington, Arlington and Fairfax Counties in Virginia and Prince Georges, Montgomery, Charles and St. Marys Counties in Maryland, had recruited 60 men.

Baltimore recruiting headquarters of the Third Corps Area, of which the Washington station is a part, reported yesterday that 570 men had been enlisted in the area within the last two weeks.

Col. John C. Pegram, recruiting officer, said the men would serve as replacements and in expansion. A goal of 2,600 enlistments for the area and 17,000 for the Nation has been set for July 1.

Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia make up the Third Corps Area.

June Shopper

Now, while you're downtown, you'll look around for a hot-weather dress—something very cool for those terrible dog days, but of course inexpensive—and maybe you can pick up some new ice tea glasses (there's only one perfectly good one left in the old set) . . . and get Junior his compass for the Boy Scouts . . . and Sister some new ginghams . . . and George his shirts (he's positively ragged) . . . and you must get some sheets and towels . . . and some goods to make curtains for the kitchen window.

And another thing you'd better start looking around for a wedding present for Cousin Barbara. You'll have to get something fairly nice, of course—oh, and there's the shower Jane Chumley's giving for next week! You'll have to get some little thing for that—probably a bridge luncheon set. And then there's that shower for Adele Minch, the girl down the street. You'll have to get two bridge luncheon sets!

"Another thing—what if Adele invites you to her wedding?—oh, and there's that announcement from George's cousin's daughter out in Seattle. Why, you'll have to mail her some little thing right away!

"Well, of course you can always expect weddings in June—but then there's the commencements, too! There's George's niece . . . and your nephew . . . and little Ruthie and Grace, the twins next door. Say, this is going to cost money! . . . W-e-l-l, you can do without the sheets and the towels until next month . . . and maybe the kitchen curtains.

Now, there's something else in the back of your mind—oh, yeh, the Moochers' wedding anniversary! And it's silver! And the Grabbs are having a tin wedding! . . . Well, of course, anniversaries would be expected to come in June . . . and Sister can do with one gingham now and the others later.

Still there's something else . . . oh, yes, the birthday party Sonny Pence is having next Saturday! And didn't Sister say something about Betty Low Smart's going to have a birthday? Why on earth people all have to be born in June—as well as married—you can't say. And besides it's the month for the income tax!

Well, maybe George's shirts will hold out awhile longer . . . and you CAN use your old ice tea glasses. And you really could get by in the hot weather with your last year's linen—no, you really need something cooler. And you're going to pick up something very, very cheap.

Now, there can't be anything else—wait, there's that collection for the present for Mrs. Powers, the retiring club president! Oh, yes, and you have to send something to the boat when Estelle Flitt sails on her cruise! . . . And there's that bon voyage for Mrs. Swank!

W-e-l-l, there's simply nothing to do but to get out your old linen dress and see if you can't freshen it up with a new collar.

New Tricks in Summer Sleeves Come From Paris Fashion Front

By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor.

NOVEL SLEEVE treatments took the spotlight at the recent Paris openings. Paris is at a standstill for "theme" or "influence" fashions due to the war and has turned its attention to dressmaker tricks. Of special interest were its sports dresses with wrist-length sleeves and bracelet-length sleeves stopping just below the elbow.

Marshall Adams

With long sleeves gaining importance for abbreviated hot weather fashions, even the home dressmaker can attempt to reproduce smart coutourier touches for her summer wardrobe. The tucks, gathers and darts that look so subtle are really achievements of the sewing machine attachment which puts the amateur dressmaker in the fool-proof class. Here are a few tricks to tuck up your sleeves.

Turned Back Cuff

When you make your long-sleeved sports dress, it is smart to have the sleeve come straight to the wrist. Then finish it off with an applied turned-back cuff or a 6-inch zipper closing. Even if you have never sewn a stitch before, you will find it easy to gather fullness into a billowy bishop sleeve that has been high fashion with French and American designers this season.

Gather this fullness into a 2-inch stitched-down cuff band. There is a failure-proof shirring attachment in sewing machine kits that will coax in the gathers in jig time. For dinner and theater frocks, there is the more formal below-elbow length sleeve, named "the bracelet" by coutouriers three years ago when they first introduced this new popular sleeve.

Roominess Provided

When you put in a sleeve, be sure to ease the fullness at the top so that it is virtually invisible. Use plenty of pins, placed at right angles to the seam. The pressure foot will stitch right over these pins so you needn't even take time to baste.

Decoration and functional sleeve details heighten the appeal of your frock. At the elbow, for instance, darts are used functionally to provide roominess. Make these 2-inch triangular folds ½-inch apart, then baste to a tapering point on the wrong side of the fabric and on the top half of the sleeve near the elbow. Stitch above the basting and then press flat. Voila! A coutourier sleeve, whipped up at home.

Brown and White

Paris (AP).—Brown and white combinations are smart again. A white organdie garden party frock has a sash of brown organdie ribbon, and a large white organdie hat with brown ribbon band and streamers. Gold-spangled brown tulle makes sash and drapery for a white crepe evening frock.

Mary Haworth's Mail

After 18 Months, Bride's 3rd Marriage Grows Cold; Her Husband Ignores Her; Should She Divorce Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I scarcely know where to begin, I have so many things to say. To be trite, I will say that I have been married 18 months (this is my third marriage); but I am very unhappy, because my husband is 15 years my senior and we don't get along on account of it. (I am 27, although always taken to be much younger.)

I married him to spite someone else, but he has been good and kind to me—even knowing this. However, I don't trust him, which seems strange, since he is so much older than I. But he is so cold and indifferent toward me, taking me entirely for granted, and letting me work hard and earn my own living.

My first husband wants me to come back to him, and I am so unhappy that at times I think it might be a worthwhile move, as we have a daughter, who is now living with an uncle and aunt. He (my first husband) is 29 and we practically grew up together. But after we were married, I got interested in another man, obtained a divorce and married a second time. This second marriage ended in divorce within the year, and "on the rebound," as the saying goes, I married this man who is 15 years my senior.

At first I didn't love him, although I liked him very much. Now it is just the other way around—I am in love with him, but I don't like him. This doesn't make sense, but I am not a very sensible person, although I manage to support myself and my little girl. My present husband has a very small job and can scarcely take care of himself without help from me.

At the time we married, I thought he was crazy about me, because he gave some pretty strong demonstrations during the courtship and for about a month afterward. But suddenly he changed. Now he treats me as a casual—very casual—acquaintance. There was a time when he devoted hours to lovemaking. Now he spends hours not even holding my hand. I could love him better than any man I have ever known, if only he would let me. But all my advances are met with a cold stare. Yet he is not unkind. He lets me do exactly as I please; but I want him to be the way he was in the beginning.

He says I worry him, and that he has lost 13 pounds in the last six months, worrying about me. I do not understand this. Do you think I should divorce him and go back to my first husband? Or just divorce him and stay single? Or should I keep on being married to a man who seems blankly indifferent to me and never gives me a compliment—unless to say that my new hat or new dress is "all right. What's the matter with it?" Your reply will be much appreciated. K. N. W.

Case History Suggests That Wife Is at Fault

DEAR K. N. W.: No doubt the man's nerves are worn to a frazzle by your flightiness, and he may even entertain the suspicion that you are not "all there" mentally. It is likely that he married you on the strength of a passing storm of infatuation, which receded quickly, leaving him washed up on the shores of bewilderment, wondering why on earth he ever did it, anyway.

However, if you truly love him (although I doubt it; as I think your reaction is one of wounded sex-vanity)—if you love him and he shows a disposition to stay married and make the best of a disappointing situation, you might yet turn the tide of his current indifference into a deep, abiding and satisfying husbandly devotion. But you can only do this by winning his respect, affection and friendship. And this cannot be done by baiting him with sex appeal and coquettish tantrums.

Apparently you have not yet discovered that happiness in marriage doesn't come in cellophane-wrapped, man-size packages, flavored to suit the individual taste and guaranteed to stand up for a lifetime, regardless of how recklessly handled. The kind of reciprocity you have in mind is something one creates for one's self and one's collaborator—hour-by-hour and year-by-year; from the day of marriage henceforth. Its very archstone is mutual consideration, stemming from a desire to understand and supply the needs of each other's nature.

It seems that your latest (and, probably, most mature-minded) husband has given considerable thought to your peculiar personality, without being able to decipher how to achieve with you a normal pattern of conjugal cooperation. I should guess that he is overwhelmingly dismayed at finding himself married to a creature who is more of an emotional firecracker than she is a woman—i. e., a feminine person of substantial reach and depth of character, who realizes that marriage and love cannot be safely used as instruments of child's play.

And while he worries over your pyrotechnic display of temperament—probably more indicative of an inner vacuum than of smouldering depths—you concentrate wholly on your side of the situation. All you know, feel or see is that your husband has changed from a once-ardent lover into a casual acquaintance, and this you resent, and for this you would punish him by getting a divorce, thus cutting off your nose to spite your face, since your actual desire (as of the moment) is to conquer his heart anew.

It should occur to you to turn the searchlight of your attention to his side of the story in order to learn why he has changed, and wherein you have failed to hold or to augment your easy gains of courtship and honeymoon days. Your case history of two divorces and a third broken-down marriage affords powerful circumstantial evidence (worth investigating) that the reasons for his change lie in your own personality and performance—which no doubt will have to be revamped for the better if you are ever to know happiness either in or out of marriage.

Since your husband wastes with worry at the rate of some two pounds per month, over the baffling estrangement that has arisen, he probably cares enough to be willing to collaborate with you in remedying whatever is wrong—if only you will sanely and sincerely meet him halfway. And such a plan of action is infinitely preferable, in my opinion, to a third divorce—which would amount to a third refusal to face and correct your own shortcomings.

Because reliable self-assessment is virtually impossible without objective, enlightened guidance, I think it advisable for you to get a psychologist's or psychiatrist's appraisal of your difficulty. One would need to audit your life story in detail before one could issue the specifically helpful prescription. M. H.

This Woman Tried Reducing The Hard Way

220-Pound Canadian Cut 30 Cords of Wood, But Lost 80 Pounds

By Ida Jean Kain

OUR nomination for the "most courageous reducer" goes to a woman in northern Canada who has taken off 80 pounds while continuing all the hard work of a rugged frontier life.

The amount of the weight lost is not phenomenal. Many women have reduced as much. But not under what circumstances! The difficulties she had to overcome were so unusual that the way of the average reducer seems easier merely by contrast!

Weighed 220.

As you may recall, we first mentioned our Canadian nominee about ten months ago. At that time she had written to say that she was determined to slim down to normal from a weight of 220 pounds and that she had already succeeded in taking off 40 pounds.

But she was having her difficulties. In the first place, it was imperative that the diet should not deplete her vitality and interfere with her work—a great deal of which is out of doors and very hard. And in the second place, her diet was necessarily extremely limited. She wrote that it was impossible to obtain fresh fruits or vegetables, fresh meat, or even milk—all important items on the balanced menu.

But by using canned fruits and vegetables—the latter with the liquid in which they were canned—cheese, eggs, canned meats and whole grain cereals, she was able to follow a low calorie, protective diet. She writes now that it has been six months since she has touched pie or cake, but she doesn't mind! She has lost another 40 pounds and her weight is down to 140 pounds. Only 10 pounds more to go and her weight will be perfect!

Size 18 Now!

Not only did she adhere rigidly to her balanced diet, but she gave exercise its due. Part of this was, of course, in the form of outdoor work. Last winter she helped to cut 30 cords of wood! But in addition, she had a set of specific calisthenics which she did every single day, regardless of the hard work! Instead of a size 48 which she used to be, she is a slim 18. As the result of her slimming her doctor declares that she looks at least ten years younger!

Under the most favorable conditions, dieting is no picnic and exercising is not the first choice for recreation. But after hearing how well this slimming program turned out in spite of obstacles, you may be inclined to minimize some of the stumbling blocks in your way. If you really want to slim down, nothing can stop you!

Beauty Secrets

Queen's Perfume

TWO BOTTLES of perfume may have cost Marie Antoinette her head. Ordered to leave Paris immediately, she waited several hours for the delivery of her favorite perfume. At least, this is the story that is handed down by a famous French firm that supplied this tragic queen with rose and violet perfume centuries ago.

This same firm that created perfumes for French queens before and after the French Revolution adds a new fragrance each year. Two of their latest are a "Wistaria Eau Florale" and a combination minx and ladylike scent, "Transparence." Newest of these is the "Wistaria," a haunting, clinging fragrance that is being introduced to the Washington market through a local store this week.

"Perfumes should be chosen according to the occasion," said Miss Hope Sansbury, special representative of this long-established perfumer. She pointed out that the reigning Queen Elizabeth has a special perfume for gloves, shoes and various costumes. Just as surely as the costume is changed for different events, so is the perfume switched to harmonize with the costume and occasion.

The strategic points to apply perfume, according to Miss Sansbury, are on the wrists, bend of elbows, in the back knee bend and at throat. When applied on the wrists the pulse beating warms the skin and causes it to absorb the oil of the perfume, thereby emitting the essence of the fragrance.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, June 5.

THE CURRENT death throes overseas have an incredible number of Americans suffering from the leaping fantods. Women, at least in this town, are practically in funereal black, and darker in their minds if their dressmakers had flopped on the night of the Prom.

ALICE HUGHES

Yet it is my experience that the men who play an active part in "the war to end war" are the hardest hit, especially those who are ever mindful of the fact that we are even worse off today than in 1917, when we had the two major allies fighting on even terms with the enemy, and a mighty British navy safely between us and the hosts in field grey. Pessimists among the vets say that now we have a couple of box kits and a few BB guns to protect our shores.

My poor old Hall, who served his hitch abroad, is morose aplenty, as he cons the daily maps and sees the names of captured Belgian towns that were disputed and won in the last days of 1918—"Audenarde," near which his Ohio regiment established a perilous bridge head across the embattled Scheldt; "Ieseghem," where he ate cold mutton for Thanksgiving dinner, and many more. Most of these fellows know at first hand the terrors we women read of but have never experienced—the bombs and machine gun bullets from the air, the nerve-shattering crash of shells, and more than all else, the almost audible fluttering of the wings of death.

What hurts these blokes most is that two catastrophes likes this had to happen in one lifetime, one generation, with the new one far more ghastly than the former. They feel that it is a foul throw of the dice, that fate has played them a rotten dirty trick, with many of them still in the prime of manhood. I have a fiddler brother-in-law who did his four years in the French army last time, taking a heavy wound, and he is now so broken that he now verges on the suicidal. So if some of the old soldiers sound like calamity howlers, try to be patient.

Georgianna Flather Bows at Garden Party

Residentials Dominate Fete as Family Has Lived Here for 3 Generations; Sita Finkenstaedt's Debut Today

The June bride is for once being out-stripped in numbers by the June debutante. From now through the middle of the month, hardly a day will go by without a big tea or dance at which some young lady will make her bow to Capital society.

First of this week's series of important debuts was that yesterday afternoon of Miss Georgianna Flather, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Flather. She was presented at a party in the garden of her home, Windslope, on Nebraska avenue.

Two gaily striped marquees were set up on the lawn below the terrace. Here cold drinks and tea time substantials were served to several hundred members of Capital society. Residentials and "cave dwellers" predominated, as Miss Flather is the third generation of her family to live in Washington.

The debutante, who recently finished her first year at Vassar, received with her mother in the drawing room. The many flowers sent to her were arranged informally here and there, instead of being banked or massed on a screen.

Miss Flather's floor length frock was made of white marquisette, and the blouse of tiny pin tucks had stripes of aqua colored ribbon, which also trimmed the round neckline. The dress had a full, billowing skirt and elbow length puffed sleeves. She carried a bouquet of white carnations and sweetheart roses.

Mrs. Flather had chosen a gown fashioned of aqua crepe with an embroidered organdy blouse. A corsage of white orchids completed her costume.

A group of debutantes in long garden dresses were here, there and everywhere, seeing that the guests were being served. They included the Misses Louise Stillwell, Marianna Evans, Rosemary and Eugenia Merrill, Sita Finkenstaedt, Nancy Glover, Ann Huidekoper, Laura Blair, Deborah Kirk, Peggy Houghteling, Patsy McKnew, Cynthia Dunn and Catherine Clement.

Out-of-Towners Also Assisting

Pouring iced tea and coffee for Mrs. Flather were several out of town guests besides her Washington friends. They included Mrs. Walter F. Peterson, of Baltimore, and Mrs. McClintock Ellis, of Princeton, N. J., who is visiting Mr and Mrs. Newbold Noyes.

Also attending the hostess were Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, Mrs. George Maurice Morris, Mrs. Donald Bingham, Mrs. Herbert Howard, who came over from Philadelphia for the party; Mrs. Reginald Huidekoper, Mrs. Hamilton McCormick-Goodhart, Mrs. Franklin Ellis, Mrs. Clarence Aspinwall, Mrs. Chester Flather—her husband is a cousin of the host; Mrs. R. M. Kauffmann and Mrs. Robert Griffin.

Others were Mrs. Emery Smith, Mrs. Selden Chapin, Mrs. David Barry, Mrs. Keith Merrill, Mrs. James L. Houghteling, Mrs. Richard Wilmer, Mrs. Walter Chappell, Mrs. Frederick Brooke and Mrs. Newbold Noyes.

The debutante, her young assistants, and a group of their beaux stayed on for an informal supper party at the Flather home after the reception. Quite thrilled with all the proceedings was the younger daughter of the house, Miss Agnes Haskell Flather, who was on hand for both parties. She wore white chiffon with big green polka dots, made with a full skirt and puffed sleeves.

Sita Finkenstaedt Makes Bow Today

Mr. and Mrs. Flather will linger on in Washington through most of July and will then go with their family to their camp in the woods of northern Wisconsin. They plan to give a dance next winter at the Sulgrave Club for their debutante daughter.

Today's debutante is Miss Sita Finkenstaedt, pretty daughter of the Edward Finkenstaedts, who will give a reception for her this afternoon at the 1925 F Street Club. If the weather is fair the party will be held in the garden.

A double debut is set for tomorrow afternoon, when Miss Cynthia Dunn and Miss Pauline Curtis will share honors at a tea to be given by Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn at their home on Observatory Circle. That evening Miss Curtis will bow at a dinner dance at which her mother, Mrs. John Gross, will be hostess at the 1925 F Street Club, her former home.

Mrs. Gross was a leading Capital hostess until her marriage two years ago took her to Bethlehem, Pa. Her older daughter, the former Miss Laura Curtis, is married to "Pete" Bostwick, the well known Long Island polo player, and many guests from Long Island and New York will doubtless come down for the dance. Among the hosts at dinner beforehand will be Mrs. Kent Legare.

Important Fetes Set for Saturday

Saturday's debutante calendar features two highlights — Mme. Espil's tea dance for her daughter, Miss Louise Stillwell, and Senator and Mrs. Warren Barbour's dance for their daughter, Elysabeth. On Monday, Miss Laura Blair, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gist Blair, will bow at an afternoon reception at Grasslands. She recently completed her studies at Foxcroft School.

Mr. and Mrs. Keith Merrill will given a garden party on Tuesday from 5:30 to 7:30 in honor of their younger daughter, Miss Eugenia Merrill. Her sister, Miss Rosemary Merrill, made her bow at a similar party last season. Following the tea there will be an informal supper party for the assistants and some of their friends.

Mrs. Hugh Dierker Luncheon Guest

Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson entertained at a small luncheon yesterday at the Shoreham in honor of Mrs. Hugh Dierker, of Los Angeles.

Mrs. Dierker, accompanied by her husband, Dr. Dierker, arrived in Washington Sunday and left last evening for a motor trip through the South before returning to their California home.

Katharine Meyer Is Married To Mr. Graham at Mt. Kisco

MRS. PHILIP LESLIE GRAHAM

Father Gives Bride Away in Ceremony At the Family Home; Couple to Live Here After Honeymoon in Bermuda

At a ceremony witnessed only by members of the immediate families, Miss Katharine Meyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, of Washington, D. C., and Mount Kisco, N. Y., and Philip Leslie Graham were married yesterday afternoon. The bridegroom is the son of Ernest R. Graham, of Miami, Fla.

The garden of Seven Springs Farm, the Meyer Home at Mount Kisco, was the scene of the wedding at which Dr. Carl Kretzmann, of South Orange, N. J., officiated at 5 p. m.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a frock of heavy silk in eggshell shade. Fashioned on tailored lines, it was made with a high neckline, a narrow collar and long, tight-fitting sleeves. The full skirt was gathered in to the fitted bodice with a narrow belt, and a fichu of old lace further accented the ensemble. The bride wore a wreath of orange blossoms in her dark hair and carried a spray of orchids.

Sister Serves As Attendant

Miss Ruth Meyer was her sister's only attendant. Her imported French frock had a light blue silk bodice with large pockets of the same material extending over the full skirt of eggshell chiffon. Her bouquet was of delphinium and hydrangeas.

Edward F. Prichard, jr., of Paris, Ky., and Washington, was best man.

Wedding Trip To Bermuda

After a honeymoon trip to Bermuda, Mr. and Mrs. Graham will make their home in Washington. The bride's traveling costume was a gray and yellow frock, worn with a gray wool coat and hat and yellow accessories.

The former Miss Meyer attended Vassar College and was graduated from the University of Chicago in 1938. She is on the editorial staff of The Washington Post.

Mr. Graham is a graduate of the University of Florida and of Harvard Law School, class of 1939. Last winter he was law clerk for Supreme Court Justice Stanley Reed. Next year he will be employed in the same capacity with Justice Felix Frankfurter.

Local Belles Come Into Own At SupperDance

Final Wednesday Night Club Party Held at 1925 F Street

Local belles came into their own at the final Wednesday Night Supper Club dance given in the Japanese lantern-lit garden of the 1925 F Street Club last night. The preceding dances this season have been somewhat usurped by the out-of-town contingent, but just a very few were on hand at last night's gala party.

Any number of cocktail parties preceded the dance. Mrs. Hugh O'Donnell gathered in a group for drinks at her home while Mr. and Mrs. Courtland Parker were hosts at their Georgetown residence to over 30 guests. Mr. and Mrs. Chase Donaldson had also asked a few in for cocktails.

One out-of-town guest at Mrs. O'Donnell's party was Mrs. "Mike" Emberico, who came with Jack Vietor. The Embericos could rightly be termed "citizens of the world" for they visit the four corners of the earth. Mrs. Emberico is here on a brief stay before joining her husband in Florida, where he has gone on a fishing trip. Others at Mrs. O'Donnell's party included Mr. and Mrs. Edward Macauley, Mrs. Eldridge Jordan and her house guest, Miss Betty Byrne, formerly of Washington; John Galliher, Christopher Bramwell, John Foster and Mrs. Sutherland Mayo.

Just to mention a few who turned up at the Parkers there were Mr. and Mrs. William Flather, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Seldin Chapin, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Chapell, Mrs. Mondell Gregg, Sherlock Davis and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Page.

Cuyler Schwartz Hostess at Party For Marsha Hatch

Miss Marsha Hatch, whose marriage to Glen Leet will take place next Tuesday, was guest of honor at a buffet supper and "Treasure Hunt" given last evening by Miss Cuyler Schwartz, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Harry Schwartz.

The party, which took place at the Schwartz residence on Q street, featured the finding of a number of gifts hidden in the grassy nooks of the garden. All clews were in verse, and the climax of the hunt was the discovery of a huge pirate's chest by Miss Hatch. Opening it, she found a variety of shower gifts, each one being labeled with a short jingle.

Guests included Miss Chiyo Thomas, Miss Peliz Bailey, Mrs. Farley Smith, Mrs. Ralph K. Chase, Mrs. Carlton Pierce, Miss Jean Beachley, Miss Katherine Overton, Mrs. R. C. Schwartz, Miss Elizabeth Morton, Miss Mary Putnam, Mrs. E. K. Newman, Mrs. Lewis Lind, Miss Agnes Daugherty, Miss Helen Carey, Miss Mary O'Mahoney, and Mrs. William Harte, of Fort Recovery, Ohio.

Mrs. J. C. Tribby Is Hostess At Luncheon

Mrs. John H. Overton, wife of the Senator from Louisiana, was ranking guest at a luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. J. Clinton Tribby, wife of Col. Tribby, at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Covers were laid for 12. Others in the company included Mrs. Herron Pearson, Mrs. Paul Maloney and her sister, Miss Lucille Le Court, of New Orleans; Mrs. Robert L. Doughton, Mrs. Finis Garrett, Mrs. Ben Craven, Mrs. Charles Fairman, Mrs. Eugene Sykes, Mrs. Edward Rhodes Stitt and Mrs. Robert Bagley.

About the Town

with DUDLEY HARMON

"REMEMBER, when reading news dispatches from Amsterdam, Rotterdam or elsewhere in Holland, that our democracy is temporarily in the hands of the enemy."

This legend, in orange ink, is now stamped on all mail leaving the Royal Netherlands Legation. It is one of many means instituted by the Dutch and Allied missions here to combat German propaganda.

ALL BUT ONE of the Supreme Court Justices have made plans for the four-months' vacations which these august figures are lucky enough to get every summer. Justice Frank Murphy is still in town working, and hasn't yet made up his mind what he will do.

Chief Justice and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes have already left for "parts unknown." Their office refused to tell where they are headed, but in past summers they have usually motored leisurely in the New England mountains and Canada, stopping off for stays here and there.

JUSTICE AND MRS. Harlan Fiske Stone will end up, as usual, on their Maine island, Isle au Haut. For the next two months, though, they will motor through the West, and it's a safe bet that Mrs. Stone's paint box and easel will be the first things unpacked on their stops.

Justice and Mrs. Felix Frankfurter have already left Washington and will divide their summer between Massachusetts and Connecticut. After their many years in Cambridge the Frankfurters call New England home.

MRS. OWEN J. ROBERTS left several weeks ago for Bryn Coed, her Pennsylvania farm, where her husband will join her. They will visit their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hamilton, of Greens Farms, Conn., where the chief attraction these days is the new Roberts grandchild.

Two justices left immediately after the court adjourned to visit their home towns in Kentucky. Justice McReynolds is at the house where he was born in Elkton for the moment, but hasn't yet mapped out further plans. In past years he nearly always went to Europe.

JUSTICE REED, now in Kentucky, will later join Mrs. Reed in Locust Valley, Long Island, where they have leased a house. They choose Long Island so as to be near their sons, Jack and Stanley, who works for New York law firms.

Justice Hugo Black will vacation in Alabama briefly, but most of the summer he and Mrs. Black will stay in their home on shady Seminary Hill, near Alexandria. Justice and Mrs. William O. Douglas will visit the Southwest en route to their home State, Washington.

SENATOR AND MRS. Warren Barbour will entertain at a large dinner for their many out of town guests before their dance on Saturday for their debutante daughter, Elysabeth. The dinner will take place at the Lar[illegible] house on Massachusetts avenue, where several hundred will gather for dancing later in the evening.

The debutante will have 12 young house guests over the week-end —six classmates from the Westover School, and six bachelors.

Mrs. Evans Sees Daughter Graduate

Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., has returned from Nashville, Tenn., where her daughter, Miss Mariana Evans, was graduated from the Ward - Belmont Preparatory School as one of its outstanding students. She also received its medal for all around excellence in athletic activities.

Mrs. Evans made the trip back by airplane. She and Mr. Evans will entertain at a large reception for their daughter June 18 on the lawn of the Chevy Chase Club. Miss Evans is one of the season's debutantes.

Embassy Tea To Aid British

Not only the garden of the British Embassy, but the palatial embassy itself will be opened to the public at the tea to be given on Sunday there to raise funds for bundles for Britain.

Mrs. George A. Garrett, chairman of the Washington committee for the organization, which sends sweaters, knitted helmets, gloves and socks to sailors and airmen of Great Britain, also announces that in case of rain the tea will be postponed to the following Sunday, June 17.

Anyone willing to pay $1 may come to the embassy, hitherto considered the most exclusive in Washington. Three thousand invitations have been issued, but tickets are not being sold in advance. Mrs. Garrett announced yesterday that the office of bundles for Britain at 1331 Connecticut avenue will be open daily, from 10 to 6, including Sunday.

Miss Virginia T. Glazebrook and Arthur R. Carnduff have sent out invitations for a boat party this afternoon at 5:30 o'clock.

A sketch of a boat and a detailed "map for launching" are inclosed with the invitation, which reads as follows: "Due to the usual tardiness of boatbuilders, even the best, the date and hour of launching is still a guess. Mrs. Marvin Reelected Hospital Board Head

G. W. President's Wife Is Named At Annual Meeting

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin was reelected yesterday as president of the Woman's Board of George Washington University Hospital. The election took place at the annual meeting, held at Wild Acres, home of Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, a former president.

Other officers for the coming year will be Mrs. G. Louis Weller, Mrs. Grosvenor and Mrs. Carl Droop, vice presidents; Mrs. H. J. Russell McNitt, treasurer; Mrs. Arthur Grahame, recording secretary; Mrs. W. Hayes Yeager, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Barton W. Richwine, assistant treasurer, and Mrs. W. Y. Handy, assistant corresponding secretary.

The board has just completed a campaign for funds to buy equipment for the hospital. It raised $830 in individual contributions and there was also a special gift of $1,030 from Mrs. Charles H. Tompkins, for equipment for the X-ray room.

One of the board's chief projects is the providing of library service for the hospital. It supports a librarian who, 12 hours a week, distributes books among the patients by means of a book truck. More than 250 volumes were in circulation last year. George Washington is the only hospital in the city where such service is given.

New members elected to the board yesterday included Mrs. Paul S. Dickens, Mrs. Francis S. Nevins, Mrs. Russell J. Fields, Mrs. Alfred Crouse, and, as an associate member, Mrs. Benjamin D. VanEvers.

Tea followed the business meeting. The tea table was in the dining room and was appointed with a large center bouquet of white and pink roses. Mrs. Droop and Mrs. Norman Smith poured.

Wellesley Alumnae Have Field Day

Mrs. Marvin left immediately after the meeting as she is preparing to fly to Los Angeles today, accompanied by her son, Cloyd, to attend the twenty-fifth anniversary reunion of her class at the University of Southern California. Dr. Marvin, president of George Washington University, is unable to leave because of commencement there next week.

Members of the Washington Wellesley Club kept their weather eyes skyward all yesterday afternoon, as the time approached for their "field day" on the grounds of the National Cathedral Elementary School. There was no rain and games commenced as scheduled at 5 o'clock with a picnic supper following.

Mrs. Laurence C. Staples, chairman of the supper committee, was assisted in serving by fellow members of the class of 1919, Mrs. Alexander J. Montgomery and Mrs. Elmer E. Barnes.

During the evening Mrs. Walter D. Brookings, retiring president of the club, announced that a program presented by the '80s, '90s and '00s had been voted the best program of the year. She presented the decade group with a silver platter, appropriately inscribed, which its members will keep this year and then pass on to next year's winner.

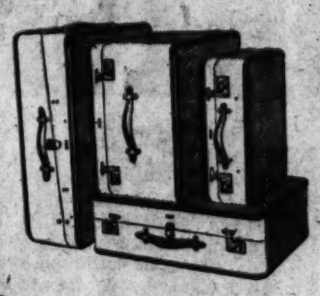

The winning program, which was held December 6 at Sidwell Friends School, consisted of a travel talk by Miss Katherine Elliott, '92, and a Christmas reading by Miss Sybil Baker, '04. Mrs. Harry R. Lee was chairman of the program.

Mrs. Bernard A. Chandler, elected 1940-41 president at the May 1 meeting of the club, introduced other new officers to the club membership. Miss Carol Piper is vice president; Mrs. John H. Pratt, corresponding secretary; urer, and Miss Barbara Patterson was reelected recording secretary.

Interfaith Parley Told Tax Shift Would Help to Solve Unemployment Problem

Voorhis Outlines Results of Congress Group's Survey

Higher income taxes for the "middle brackets" and lower real estate taxes for farmers are among 13 recommendations of a subcommittee of the nonpartisan Congressional Conference of Unemployment, Representative Voorhis (Democrat), California, said last night.

Delegates to the Interfaith Conference on Unemployment in the Departmental Auditorium heard, in addition to the findings of the Congressional conference, a proposition that Congress buy 12 central Federal Reserve banks. Speakers included Senator Thomas (Democrat), Utah, and Representative Oliver (Republican), Maine.

Among other recommendations of the subcommittee, of which Voorhis is a member, is legislation for a national old-age pension retirement system for all groups, operated on a pay-as-you-go basis and financed partly by inheritance and income taxes, he said.

Would Expand Crops

Suggested aids to the farmer include expansion of marketing cooperatives, elimination of monopoly market control, revision of farm real estate taxes according to farm income and ability to pay, expansion of the stamp plan to agricultural commodities and legislation for loans to farmers at the lowest possible interest.

Creation of a regular standing committee of the House on unemployment is recommended.

Voorhis also proposed that "Congress buy the capital stock of the 12 Federal Reserve banks from the present owners, the member banks," as "the most important single thing which could be done at this moment both from the standpoint of our economic health and from the standpoint of national defense."

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, told the conference of some 300 Catholic, Jewish and Protestant Americans that "unity" was needed to end unemployment. "We are today building that unity on national defense," he said.

Urges U. S. Jobs for All

Earlier yesterday the conferees heard Dr. E. A. Goldenweiser, director of the Federal Reserve System's division of research and statistics, suggest a Government job "for every man and woman who is able and willing to work but unable to secure a job in private enterprise."

Declaring "the law of supply and demand is a business myth," E. R. Bowen, general secretary of the Cooperative League of the U. S. A., said lower prices were the answer to unemployment and urged expansion of the cooperative movement as a means of reducing them.

♣ K 8 5

What action do you take?

5. What is the trump echo and what does it indicate?

6. What is the no trump echo and what does it indicate?

Answers to Quiz

1. Two diamonds; any other bid is wrong.

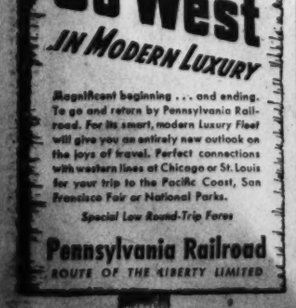

2. Pass; you have a minimum. Two no trump or three diamonds are not acceptable.

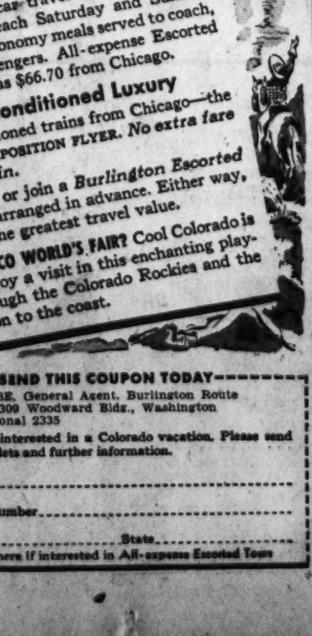

3. Four diamonds, a slam try.

4. Double; show the spades later. It would be improper to overcall with this hand. If your partner has four hearts and some little strength you may have a game in that suit. The double will help you find out.

5. The trump echo is the play of a high trump on the first round of the suit, followed by a lower trump on the next round, indicating the possession of at least one more trump and also the possession of power to ruff a side suit.

6. The no trump echo is the play of a high trump on the first round of the suit, followed by a lower card on the next round, indicating the possession of a doubleton in a suit of which the visible dummy holds almost all the high cards, and thereby giving partner an accurate count on the cards held by the declarer.

Annenberg's Evasion Called Deliberate Act

Unable to Keep Tab On Money, Jurist Told; Court May Rule Today

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 5.—M. L. Annenberg, publisher of papers and magazines, real estate operator and former ruler of horserace news empire, was portrayed alternately today as a deliberate evader of the income tax laws and as a business titan who was unable to keep close tab on his many millions.

Prosecuting and defense attorneys read lengthy statements on his manifold financial affairs as a prelude to action by Judge James H. Wilkerson on Annenberg's plea of guilty to failure to pay $1,217,296 in levies on his 1936 earnings. The jurist may pronounce judgment tomorrow or may take the case under advisement for later disposition.

Income Jumped

The Government, in a 108-page statement, contended that Annenberg's "desire to evade his income taxes was as keen as it was to make the income."

It set forth that his net worth increased from $7,858,343.35 in January, 1930, to $19,496,308.76 in June, 1938—a gain of $11,637,965.41. It alleged that he used many of his 80 or more corporations "as devices to conceal a subsantial part" of his income. It claimed that he watched details so closely that he directed subordinates to pare or eliminate "relatively small overhead expenses" and criticized some of them for "not thinking up new ideas for money making."

Defense Counsel Weymouth Kirkland maintained Annenberg was not even civilly liable for taxes on 93 per cent of the amount charged in the indictment and that the other 7 per cent involved mitigating circumstances.

"Millions Per Year"

The handling of "many millions of dollars per year" flowing from Annenberg's "vast and complex network of enterprises," he added, was in the hands of a "wholly inadequate" bookkeeping and accounting department.

He challenged the accuracy of the Government's allegations and conclusions and asserted that his client's guilty plea did not constitute an admission that all the charges were "well founded."

Kirkland said that the $8,000,000 Annenberg agreed to pay to the Treasury in settlement of civil tax claims was twice as much as the average corporation with similar profits would have to pay.

Judge Wilkerson raised the question of whether, in disposing of Annenberg's plea of guilty to one of the 17 counts against him, he should consider the tax settlement and the Government's agreement to dismiss all remaining charges.

United States District Attorney Campbell asked that the court take the settlement into consideration, but regard the civil and criminal phases as separate. Kirkland reported that he would seek clemency.

Washington Pianists' Club holds its fourteenth festival in Calvary Methodist Church. Alice Burbage Hesselbach presents Rae Alice Ebner in compositions by Bach, Beethoven, Chopin and Litolff. Louis Potter presents Sally West in compositions by Bach, Schumann and Grieg.

Calvary Methodist Church was well filled last evening by auditors assembled for the second set of recitals in the fourteenth festival of the Washington Panists Club founded by Dr. Katherine McReynolds Morrison for the maintenance of high standards of piano playing. This season all the participants, who are selected as representative of prominent teachers, are giving their first recitals as members of the organization. Last Monday evening, when this chronicler was unable to be present, La Salle Spier presented Charlton Meyer, and Felian Garzia presented Jean McCandlish.

BROWN

A certain degree of proficiency is essential for membership in the club and the recitals have a level of musicianship which makes them interesting. As none of the young pianists have yet assumed professional status, their work is not offered as a subject for criticism nor is there a competitive element in the festival, which fosters confidence and poise.

In the first recital last evening, Rae Alice Ebner, a pupil of Alice Burbage Hesselbach, showed technical facility in Bach's F major prelude and fugue, Beethoven's C sharp minor sonata, and three pieces by Chopin: the Fantaisie-Impromptu, the Berceuse and the A flat major Waltz. Her style of playing was more brilliant than emotional. Her final number was the scherzo from Henry Charles Litolff's "Concerto Symphonique," Op. 102—a work seldom heard these days. An English pianist and publisher of music, Litolff wrote, among a large quantity of compositions, five of these symphonic concertos which, because of their melodic and harmonic attractiveness, deserve more hearings than they receive.

Sally West, presented by Louis Potter, was the second recitalist in a program consisting of three Bach transcriptions by Liszt, Saint-Saens and Myra Hess, Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques" and the first movement of the Grieg concerto. She had a forthright manner and a sturdy dynamic command which was particularly effective in the exacting work that Schumann originally called "Studies in Orchestral Style." As an interpreter she disclosed dramatic potentialities.

The festival will end tomorrow night with recitals by Karlin Meyer, a pupil of Alexander Sklarevski, and Clarice Leiner Levy, a pupil of Benjamin Ratner.

Red Cross To Seek Funds In Schools

Board Makes Exception to Policy Against Solicitation

The European situation prompted the Board of Education yesterday to make an exception in its "long-standing and consistent policy" against solicitation of funds from school children, to allow Red Cross war relief contributions to be collected in the schools.

At the same time the board set up a policy for "granting leave of absence to employes for the purpose of entering upon service in preparation for possible mobilization for national defense."

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent, reported to the board that the District Commissioners "must assume full responsibility for inadequate school facilities that will inevitably develop for lack of a deficiency appropriation for an elementary school in the vicinity of Minnesota avenue and Ely place southeast.

In reporting the Commissioners' unfavorable action on the board's request for the appropriation, Dr. Ballou said the Alley Dwelling Authority project in that neighborhood necessitated "immediate provision" for several hundred children.

The board voted to include in its 1942 budget estimates a sum sufficient to acquire land from the Alley Dwelling Authority for a playground at Mott School. The board's finance committee will meet Friday to begin preparation of the 1942 budget.

Fifty-two classrooms are needed in elementary schools to relieve congestion, Dr. Ballou said in his report on schoolhouse accommodations. The figures, as of last October, showed that 85 other rooms are needed in elementary schools to eliminate portables, rented quarters, undesirable rooms, part-time classes and to replace buildings which should be abandoned.

Boundaries for the area of the new Calvin Coolidge High School were announced. They are: North, District Line from Rock Creek Park to Riggs road; east, District Line from Riggs road to junction of Kennedy street and South Dakota avenue; south, Kennedy street to Rock Creek Park; west, Rock Creek Park to District Line.

Principals of summer schools were appointed by the board: Central, Miss M. H. Selah; Macfarland, Miss J. A. Tennyson; Stuart, Miss E. H. Matthews; Addison, Miss G. M. Paynter; Blair, Miss Margaret Durand; Brown, Miss F. G. Richardson; Buchanan, Mrs. G. C. Palmer; Burroughs, Mrs. M. U. Dunn; Emery, Miss E. B. Marshall; Fairbrother, Miss R. A. 143 Bliss School Graduates Hear Denunciation of War

One hundred and forty-three graduates of the Bliss Electrical School, Takoma Park, Md., last night heard the Rev. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor of the Lutheran Church of the Reformation, denounce "military fighting" in an address at the forty-seventh annual commencement in the auditorium of the Roosevelt High School.

Before presenting the diplomas Prof. Louis Denton Bliss, president of the school, spoke on "Opportunity." "There is not a single fact that you learn or a tiny discovery that you make today that may not stand forth, even a quarter of a century hence, as the very thing you need to aid you in some crucial hour," he asserted.

The Rev. Ernest R. Bryan, pastor of the Takoma Park Christian Church, gave the invocation.

Alumni prizes to those having the highest standing in their work were awarded by Donald S. Bliss, vice president, to Albert L. Hinkle, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, who received the Skipworth Peyton Coale Memorial Prize established at the school in 1922. Other awards went to Delo Aflee Calvin, Ellsworth, Ohio; Jacques R. Inhabitants Trace History Of Avenue

Historic Pennsylvania avenue last night became once more a "bog of mud and dust," devoid of sidewalks, inundated with flood waters, paved with blocks, and trod upon by Andrew Jackson and Abraham Lincoln. The transformations took place in reminiscences of members of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, meeting at the Old Union Engine House, Nineteenth and H streets northwest.

John Claggett Proctor, presiding officer, told of the "birthday" of the thoroughfare. It was April 14, 1792, he said, that the original District Commissioners took advantage of powers conferred upon them in the Capital's founding a year earlier, and authorized the building of a street "in the center (of the city) two perches wide."

Jesse Suter told of the startling innovation of arc light illumination before the turn of the century.

Democrats Unconcerned In D. C. Voting

Less than 900 Washington Democrats straggled into the party's five primary polling places yesterday and seized their quadrennial opportunity to play "citizen" for a day by voting their Presidential preference.

They voted overwhelmingly for Franklin D. Roosevelt, and bound the District's 12 delegates to the Democratic National Convention to continue voting for the President until a candidate is nominated.

The 12 delegates will control 6 votes at the convention, the equal of several States, including Arizona, Delaware, Nevada, New Mexico and Wyoming.

Walter F. Bramhall, secretary of the District Democratic Central Committee, explained that the balloting was exceptionally light yesterday because "there was no competition."

All candidates were unopposed, except on the Presidential preference ballot, and there, Bramhall said, "the draft Roosevelt movement was too strong for opposition." In 1936 the vote totaled 1,729.

Exact totals were not available last night, but Bramhall announced that approximately 760 votes were cast for the President, about 90 for Postmaster General Farley, about 20 for Secretary Hull, and about 15 for Federal Security Administrator McNutt.

Fifth place went to Vice President Garner and sixth to Senator Wheeler, of Montana, both of whom registered less than 10. One vote was written in for Socialist Candidate Norman Thomas.

The votes for Hull and McNutt were also write-ins.

Malcolm S. McConihe was chosen national committeeman and Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, national committeewoman.

Midshipman Will Enter Priesthood

Richard Heath, 21, To Join Order After Graduation

For 21-year-old Midshipman Richard Heath, graduation exercises at the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis today will mark the unusual change in his career from the Navy to the priesthood.

HEATH

Today Midshipman Heath will resign from naval service shortly after being awarded his bachelor of science degree, and August 5 he will enter a Kentucky convent to begin seven years of study leading to priesthood in the Dominican Order.

Heath, according to Father James M. Eagan, of the Dominican House of Studies at Catholic University, first thought of entering the order two years ago. Only three weeks ago the youth learned the Dominican provincial had approved his request. Suspension of the regulations requiring Naval Academy graduates to serve two years in the Navy was arranged through Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts. The midshipman is from Somerville, Mass.

Heath was a letterman on the cross-country and track teams, a staff writer for the Log, weekly magazine, for four years, founder and editor of the Bulletin for Catholic students, and a member of the Boat and Newman clubs.

The recently issued edition of Lucky Bag, Naval Academy annual, contains a biographical sketch of Midshipman Heath written by his roommate as is the custom.

Heath, according to the write-up, is fond of sailing, keeping up with the latest books, and quoting the works of St. Thomas Aquinas and G. K. Chesterton. Of Heath's future, the schoolmate said: "His interest in people and life promise a happy and successful future for him."

Starting on August 5, Heath will undertake seven years of study in philosophy and theology

2 Marines Given 15-Year Terms In Park Slaying

Two Quantico Marines received 15-year sentences yesterday in the United States District Court at Alexandria for the Fort Hunt picnic-ground slaying of a Virginia tobacco salesman. Both entered pleas of guilty to second-degree murder charges, but one later took the stand, repudiated a signed statement and fervently maintained his innocence.

The Marines, Pvts. Alexander J. Stevenson, 28, of Andalusia, Pa., and William J. Palmer, 16, of Sunbury, Pa., were arrested two weeks after the mutilated body of Sidney M. Little, 29, of Fredericksburg, Va., was found in the snow 100 yards from Mount Vernon boulevard on January 7.

As testimony from 12 witnesses, including three Federal Bureau of Investigation agents, was taken before sentence was delivered, Stevenson, tall, brawny and set-faced, took the stand, turned dramatically to Judge Pollard, and cried:

"I swear to God I'm innocent. I know you won't believe me. But I will swear to my dying day I am innocent of this crime. And regardless of how this comes out, I'll laugh in the face of everybody."

Editor Honored At Sidwell Graduation

Seniors at the school who received certificates of the society are Anne Cabell Noland, Mary Lou Rutledge, Elizabeth Anne Powell and Ruth Faye Segal.

Dr. Alexander Purdy, of Hartford Theological Seminary, spoke at the commencement program held last night in the school gymnasium.

Aspen Hill Exhibitor Wins Sweepstakes, Six Ribbons in Takoma Club Peony Show

Clarence G. Carr, Aspen Hill, Md., won the sweepstakes at the twelfth annual peony show of the Takoma Horticultural Club, which opened last night at the Takoma branch of the Public Library, Fifth and Cedar streets northwest.

Carr's "Sarah Bernhardt" in pink with red speckled center measuring 7 inches in width was judged the second best bloom.

The largest group of peonies was exhibited by Mrs. H. A. Harding, of Viers Mill road, Wheaton, Md., whose arrangement numbered 19 "Felix Crousse" red peonies in a basket.

Bloodworth Gets 4-Run Homer in 4th

Masterson's 4-Hit Hurling Sparkles; Indian Chief's Tactics Irk Florida Hitter

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

A 20-year-old kid wearing eyeglasses and a big-muscled boy from Florida proved a potent pair for the Nats yesterday, and extracted a 6-to-1 victory from Cleveland's second-place Indians.

Would you rather hear first about the bespectacled Walter Masterson's four-hit pitching, or would you like to know all about Jimmy Bloodworth's homer with the bases full? Those were the two items that delivered the game into the keeping of the Nats.

More spectacular, perhaps, was the blow by Bloodworth, occurring as it did in the wake of an intended affront to the batting prowess of the Florida lad. It happened in the fourth inning, and here's how:

With Washington runners on second and third, Manager Oscar Vitt went strategic and ordered Jake Early purposely walked to fill the bases. It was a tactical error. Joe Dobson's next pitch was translated into four Washington runs by Bloodworth. He unloaded his sixth homer of the season and unloaded the bases with a beauteous clout into the centerfield bleachers, 400 feet distant.

Struck Out First Two

Of equal beauty was Masterson's pitching performance. The rookie right hander, who 18 months ago was pitching for the greater glory of the Rinky Dink A. C. on the Philadelphia sandlots, was something to behold yesterday. He struck out the first two men to face him, and it was a fair indication of what was to happen.

Serving up a crackling fast ball and a clever change of pace, Masterson yielded only three hits until the ninth. Then he lost his bid for Washington's first shut-out victory of the season when his control deserted him briefly.

Masterson's pitching job appeared to be losing much of its luster in that ninth. Two walks and an infield single by Beau Bell filled the bases with Indians before he could get anybody out, and Bucky Harris anxiously waved a relief pitcher to the bull pen. But from that point Masterson cracked down hard. He struck out Jeff Heath, disposed of Ken Keltner on a ground ball while a run scored and then forced Ray Mack to fly out to Walker in deep left.

Welaj's Fielding Helps

The young Philadelphian, who had beaten the Athletics with a three-hit performance in a seven-inning game in his last start, gave up a single to Keltner in the second inning, and walked Mack, but Johnny Welaj delivered him from danger with a running catch of Hemsley's long drive. He averted trouble for himself in the third inning with a self-defense stop of Bell's slam into the box. A harmless single by Mack in the fifth and an equally futile double by Boudreau in the sixth were the only other hits he allowed until Bell beat out and infield job in the ninth.

Joe Dobson gave Masterson a battle of it for three innings, and then came the luscious fourth for the Nats. Buddy Lewis singled to right and then the Indians' defense went haywire. Boudreau neglected to cover second on Welaj's poor bunt and Lewis advanced with Welaj being out at first. Then the Nats began to get obstreperous.

Gee Walker beat out a hit to Mack which moved Lewis to third and Zeke Bonura pounded a vicious single off Keltner's glove which scored Lewis and moved Walker to third, and when Keltner leisurely threw the ball to third instead of second, Bonura moved up an extra base. Then it was that Cleveland strategy took the form of a pass to Early which moved Bloodworth into the batter's box.

Bloodworth didn't dally. He cowtailed Dobson's first offering and the Nats won the ball game. They scored another run against 6-foo-8-inch Mike Naymick in the seventh, but that one was very unexciting.

Yanks Collect 12 Hits; Beat Chisox, 7 to 5

Get Revenge Off Lefthander Lee; Selkirk, Gordon, Rolfe Lead Attack

By the Associated Press

New York, June 5.—The world champion Yankees hammered out their revenge today on another lefthander who had stopped them early in the season, piling up 12 hits against Thornton Lee and downing the Chicago White Sox, 7 to 5.

It was a spotty game with the Sox leading, 1 to 0, for the first four innings as Lee and Monte Pearson duelled desperately, then the Yanks staging a seven-run bombardment over the next four frames and the Sox finally ganging up for three runs in the ninth to chase Pearson.

In their final turn at bat Eric McNair doubled, Mike Tresh tripled and Pinch-hitter Ken Silvestri homered. When Bob Kennedy added a single Fireman Johnny Murphy rushed in to save Pearson's fifth victory for him. Until the ninth Pearson had allowed only five hits, although giving up a run in the first on a single and three successive walks and another in the eighth on a walk and Luke Applin's double.

For the Yanks Selkirk hit his seventh home run and along with Joe Gordon and Red Rolfe had three hits.

Light Heavy Champ Wins Before 6,075

Gets Unanimous Decision After Rush In 15th; Last-Round Knockdown Tainted

By the Associated Press

Detroit, June 5.—Billy Conn, the smiling, dancing Irishman from Pittsburgh, successfully defended his world's light-heavyweight boxing championship tonight by beating out a close 15-round decision over Gus Lesnevich, plodding challenger from Cliffside Park, N. J. Each man weighed 173½ pounds.

The bout second between the two, was almost an exact repetition of their first engagement in New York last November with Conn behind going into the sixth round and then coming on to win.

Knockdown Questioned

There was only one knockdown—scored by Conn in the final round—and it was questionable. Lesnevich went to the floor momentarily after taking a left hook on the chin in a corner that was slippery from water spilled from a bucket.

Lesnevich, at a disadvantage in reach, gave Conn considerable trouble in the early stages with a body attack from close in, but the darting, jabbing Conn won all but one of last six rounds, losing the tenth on a low blow.

Unanimous Decision

The decision of Referee Sam Hennessey and Judges Michael (Dad) Butler and Harry Hall was unanimous. Hennessey gave Conn seven rounds, Hall awarded him eight, and Butler six.

The bout was fought in sultry heat before a crowd of 6,075 persons who contributed a net gate of only $17,048.40, a disappointing house for the copromoters, Mike Jacobs, of New York, and John Nelson, of Detroit.

It was Conn's third successful defense of the championship that he won last July from Melio Bettina. Before tonight's fight Conn said that if he won he would quit the 175-pound class to campaign among the heavyweights, aiming at a shot with Champion Joe Louis.

Browns Beat Bosox, 4-3, in 14th Inning

By the Associated Press

Boston, June 5.—After holding the hard-hitting Boston Red Sox to five hits over the last seven frames, Relief Pitcher Bob Harris broke up a 14-inning game today to give the last-place St. Louis Browns a 4-to-3 decision over the American League's leaders.

Two of the Browns were out when Harris came to bat in the fourteenth and drove a single to short right with Johnny Bernardino on third and Bob Swift on first.

Before scoring the winning tally, Berardino had singled off Jim Bagby, jr., who replaced Mickey Harris in the ninth, and had gone to third when Bob Swift caromed a liner off Marv Owen's glove.

Southpaw Mickey Harris had a 3-to-1 lead and one out in the ninth when he weakened and passed Roy Cullenbine. After George McQuinn forced that free rider, Myril Hoag and Chet Laabs put the Browns into a tie by belting Mickey for consecutive two-baggers.

The defeat was doubly costly, for in the second inning Tabor slid into second base and was spiked on the little finger of his throwing hand by Bernardino, and Bobby Doerr was forced out of action when he pulled a leg muscle in the thirteenth inning.

Rowe Easily Defeats A's For Detroit

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, June 6.—Lynwood "Schoolboy" Rowe won his fourth straight game of the season tonight giving up seven hits—all singles—as the Detroit Tigers won an easy 9-to-1 victory over the Athletics before 18,550 at Shibe Park.

The big right-hander yielded only two hits—a pair of singles by Wally Moses—until the seventh, then three singles by Sam Chapman and Pinch-hitters Chubby Dean and Al Simmons scored the A's lone tally. Dick Siebert and Chapman singled in the ninth for the other two safeties.

Rowe also helped win his own game by driving in 2 runs with a double in the sixth and bringing Bruce Campbell home in the ninth.

Detroit scored a run in the first inning when George Caster walked Rudy York with the bases loaded. Campbell's triple and George Tebbetts' double scored another in the fourth.

Barney McCosky's triple and singles by Hank Greenberg, York and Pinky Higgins brought in two more in the seventh while four straight hits and a fly added two more in the eighth off Herman Besse.

Standard Linen Bows, 7 to 4, To I. B. M. Ten

Behind the two-hit pitching of Jack Smith, I. B. M. ten turned back Standard Linen, 7 to 4, last night at Ballston Stadium to tie up first-half honors in the Tri-State League. Smith fanned a total of 11. The batting star for the winners was Catcher Plaisted, who homered in the fourth inning.

In the first half of the twin bill, Dixie Tavern earned a 4-to-3 judgment over Cameo, with Shanks hurling a 1-hitter. The Tavern's winning runs was scored in the third when "Bunker" Hill doubled and came home on a sacrifice.

Reds Capture Night Game From Giants

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, June 5.—The Reds stopped the gaining Giants 7-2 in their first night tilt of the season by jumping onto Harry Gumbert for five runs in the second inning and coasting on to victory.

Junior Thompson, who collected his seventh victory, drove in three runs. He allowed ten hits but kept them scattered most of the way.

Altus Allen Knocks Out Paychek in 11th

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 5.—Altus Allen, 19-year-old Chicago Negro out of the amateur ranks only a year, knocked out Johnny Paychek, Des Moines heavyweight, in the last round of their ten-round, bloody battle in the Coliseum tonight.

Paychek, attempting a comeback for the first time since he was knocked out by Joe Louis in four punches nine weeks ago, was in full retreat eight of the ten rounds. Paychek won only the third and ninth rounds.

Paychek weighed 188 pounds and Allen 179½.

Paychek displayed a flash of his former self in the third and ninth when he hooked lefts to the body and right crosses to the head.

The youthful Negro cut a gash under Paychek's eye in the sixth round and proceeded to give the veteran no rest.

In the tenth the bloody Paychek was floored for a count of nine with a right to the jaw. He got up to run into another, which knocked him flat on his back. He was counted out and had to be helped to his corner.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

There is a strong temptation to foresee happier times for the Washington Ball Club. Despite all their shortcomings, the Nats are only a half game removed from fifth place this morning, and only 4½ games out of the first division. What is more important, they appear to be definitely on the improve.

POVICH

On paper, the Nats don't appear to be a formidable club. Dutch Leonard is the only pitcher who can be definitely tabbed as a winner. Zeke Bonura is not the sort of a first baseman who contributes to a tight infield. Jimmy Bloodworth, at second base, is no star. At third base, Buddy Lewis is synonymous with many an error. All these items are no comfort to Manager Bucky Harris.

But somehow, the team is threatening to do very well indeed. Big Bonura, incredible as it may seem, has been no drawback on the defense. For his every error at third base, Lewis has been contributing a spectacular play. Bloodworth has been getting around all right in a heavy-footed sort of way, and actually the pitching has not been too bad of late.

The Nats have been getting runs in a quantity that none expected. In fact, they have made more hits, scored more runs and stolen more bases than any club in the league. Anytime they get a decently-pitched game they can win it. On the bases they're the fastest club in the league.

It's the best run-producing club Clark Griffith has owned since Joe Cronin won him a pennant in 1933 with the help of the hitting of Heinie Manush, Buddy Myer, Goose Goslin and Joe Kuhel. Banging in runs for the Nats are Gerald Walker, Zeke Bonura, Jimmy Bloodworth and Johnny Welaj.

When Cecil Travis recovers from his spike wound and returns to the shortstop job, the Nats will be an even lustier-socking outfit, without any sacrifice of defensive power. In order to capitalize on Travis' hitting, Manager Harris is willing to struggle along with Lewis at third base.

Harris' newest source of comfort is in the sudden reformation of his pitching staff. For the first six weeks of the season he had only Dutch Leonard as a winning pitcher. Recently, Ken Chase has begun to justify his spring notices and yesterday Walter Masterson threw nine more innings of sunshine into Harris' life.

Masterson's four-hit performance was particularly pleasing to Harris inasmuch as it bore evidence that the young right-hander is no flash in the pan. He has now pitched two brilliant games in succession. Last week he contributed a three-hit victory over the Athletics.

The Masterson case is a particular source of joy for Harris who went far out on a limb for the lad the first time he ever saw him throw a ball. That was late in the season of 1938 when Masterson joined the Nats fresh from the Philadelphia sandlots. In 1939, Harris never wavered in his faith in the lad despite his inability to win. He knew the reason.

Masterson could scarcely see the plate, much less throw a ball across it. Not until he was closely questioned by Harris did he admit that his vision was seriously impaired. The Nats' front office ordered him to an oculist. With spectacles, Masterson's timidity on the mound vanished. No longer was he frightened by the possibility of being hit by a ball driven back to the box. He was not afraid to follow through with his pitches, and his fast ball again became "alive."

Harris was pleased with the way Masterson won his game at Philadelphia last week. He walked five men in the first inning, an item that would be calculated to disconcert any young pitcher, particularly a kid who was pitching in his home town. But he pulled himself together confidently and pitched shut-out ball for the rest of the way.

And so now it is Leonard, Chase and Masterson taking a regular turn on the mound for the Nats. Unless the latter pair has been playing us false, they will round out a capable trio of starting pitchers. From Willis Hudlin, Rene Monteagudo and Joe Haynes, Harris may scrape up one more acceptable starter.

That pitching picture is a pleasure for Harris to behold at this time when the Nats are swatting the ball. The same kind of pitching that he now has reason to expect, would have maintained the Nats in the first division earlier in the season. The fact is that the first-division competition has been none too spectacular.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 5.—When you sit down at your portable and write a piece for the papers—however innocuous—you never know who you are hurting.

In trying to point out to you some of the angles surrounding tomorrow night's fight between up-and-coming Patrick Edward Comiskey and down-and-going Steve Dudas, we hurt Mrs. Dudas. We don't know the lady, but we're all for her, after hearing the way she reacted to an accidental and indirect slur on her man.

CONSIDINE

When she read here and elsewhere that her Steve could only be counted upon to lose to Comiskey, in view of certain political situations surrounding the fight, she did what any honest wife would do. She called up Joe Gould, her husband's manager, and she told him with quiet indignation that he must do everything in his power to see Steve through to victory. As for Steve, she could speak for him, she said. He had never tossed a fight in his life, even when they needed the money, and even though his opportunities, particularly in these last few years, have been numerous. And, Mrs. Dudas said, she and Steve aren't going to begin making money that way now. He'd fight honestly, she cried, or he wouldn't fight at all.

That's a fine thing, and it makes you humble and halting to find such dignity and character in the fight game. You've got to believe that her man will get out there and whale away at that big Irishman's jaw—even though your reason, or the cynicism born of watching too many fights, prompts you to believe otherwise.

Here's the setup: Comiskey is coming up, Dudas is going. Comiskey has the punch, the unconscious color and the nationality that would make him a tremendous drawing card; Dudas hasn't. Gould, who control Dudas, was battling with Mike Jacobs, who has Comiskey under a promotorial contract. They were battling over Gould's "cut" of Jacobs' heavy profits.

Dudas won the last time the men fought. Joe and Mike have settled their differences and Gould apparently has become a part of the firm. Therefore, as a part of the firm, he and it will do a lot better with Comiskey back in winning stride than to have him eradicated as a box office draw—as would become the case if Dudas won again.

There is no binding testimony to make us believe that any of the principals named above has ever been mixed up in a bag-show. I think Jacobs promotes as honestly as the game can be promoted. But this just happens to be a match that smacks of confusing outside factors. The public thinks so, too, for it has posted Comiskey as a 2-to-1 favorite, even though the punchless Dudas handled him like a baby the last time they met.

Before Comiskey lies a scad of big money fights. He's the only young guy around with a real punch. If careful matchmaking can keep him winning, he might combine eventually with Joe Louis to bring back the million-dollar gate. Say, along about September of 1941. But Dudas . . .

We'll believe Mrs. Dudas—who sounds okay to us. And if her man gets belted out as we're afraid he will, we'll believe that it was simply because Comiskey's youth and sock overcame Steve's crafty defensive skill and superior thinking apparatus. And overcome it without the faintest trace of acquiescence on the part of the husband who must go home after the fight, to face the eyes of a trusting, faithful wife.

The return match between Dudas and Comiskey might have been without sinister implications from the very start. But somehow it is comforting to learn that Dudas is out to do everything in his power to make it two in a row and snuff out Comiskey. It is comforting to know that spiritually the bout will be policed by a good woman who has pledged the honesty of her man.

Winds Hamper Players' Practice Rounds at National Open

Dick Metz's 70 Paces Field In Day's Play

Clayton Heafner Wins Driving Contest; Washington Golfers Have Trouble

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
A Staff Correspondent

Canterbury Golf Course, Cleveland, Ohio, June 5.—The boys who were laughing at the "Winds of Canterbury" changed their tunes to-day. The blow that originates at Lake Erie, some 8 miles distant, played over this 6,900-yard course at full strength as the 168 starters in the forty-fourth National Open Championship tuned their games with final practice rounds.

For the past two or three days Ben Hogan and several others have been taking par apart in the trial rounds, but the winds were not in evidence. Today it was a different golf course, and the handsome man from Chicago—Dick Metz—reported the lowest trial spin, a 2 under par 70.

Metz was one of the few that reported a score. A majority of the big boys were content to play two and three balls on every hole, and surround the round with a session on the practice tee and putting green.

Heafner Wins in Driving

The afternoon driving contest went to the big belter from North Carolina, Clayton Heafner, who threw his powerful frame into three shots for an 805-yard total. The former candy maker, who is on his way to becoming one of the game's gallery favorites, picked up $75 in expense money.

Jimmy Thomson hit the longest ball, 304 yards, but his third was out of bounds.

The Washington contingent played 18 holes in the morning with Andy Gibson, Baltimore's lone qualifier, they all had trouble.

George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood professional, was best in the foursome with 37-39—76, while Gibson was 79, Gene Larkin, Woodmont, 39-42-81, and Lew Worsham, Burning Tree, 44-40—84. It was their second trip around the layout, and they were all several strokes over their Tuesday's totals.

A 76 on this course today was nothing to be ashamed of, however. For instance not one member of the foursome nor few in any other reached the green on the 615-yard par 5 sixteenth hole in three shots. The wind was dead in the face. The rough off the fairway is so high that play was slowed time and again in most every foursome to allow the players and caddies to hunt for balls. The greens are true, but slick. And two putts from 40 feet is just about perfect.

Wersham was about the only member of the D. C. contingent to hit in the driving contest. He started well with 263 and 273 yards with the first two balls but he tried to belt the third and topped it in front of the tee. He was not playing as bad as his morning 84 sounds, he just hit a few too many in that wiry rough. Larkin had par for a 75 on the fifteenth tee but he ran into a 7 and 6 to finish with his 81. Diffenbaugh was 1 under par for five holes of the back nine but the four finishing holes are made to order for bogeys and George also ran into trouble at the finish.

Guldahl Liked

A large practice-day gallery divided its time between a half dozen attractive matches. A made to order threesome of Walter Hagen, Jimmy Demaret and John Montague teed off together but they were content to hit two or three balls each time they stopped.

Defending Champion Byron Nelson, playing with Ed Dudley, Lawson Little and Harold McSpaden, laughed off queries as to his score, and the others followed suit. Sammy Snead picked up on two or three holes to save a count while playing with Dick Metz, Johnny Revolta and Ralph Guldahl.

Hogan may be the betting favorite but a quiet favoritism is rolling up for Guldahl, the '37 and '38 champion, who won the Western Open over this same course with a 285 total. Guldahl has been here for two weeks and if he duplicates the 285 he'll be in the winner's circle Saturday night. The consensus of opinion on the winning score is now from 290 on up.

A bet on the Texas entry would get you more than 2 to 1. Nelson, Guldahl, Ben Hogan and Jimmy Demaret are natives of the Lone Star State.

The U. S. G. A. today invited Enrique Bertolino, Buenos Aires, Argentina, to play in the tournament. Bertolino failed in the New York qualifying rounds but he came to this country several months ago under the impression that foreigners were automatic qualifiers, so the golf body invited him, to further the cause of international friendship.

Bertolino's companions, Martin Pose and Aurelio Castanon, are well respected by the American stars with Pose the most biggest threat.

Craig Wood's recent Metropolitan Open victory boosted his stock in the golf classic that opens with an 18-hole qualifying round tomorrow while nine former champions, including Guldahl and Nelson, may have another say in the title. The others are Tommy Armour, Gene Sarazen, Sam Parks, Tony Manero, Johnny Farrell, Olin Dutra and Hagen.

Goodman, Tommy Tailer and Public Links Champion Andy Szwedko and Wilfred Wehrle are outstanding among the 29 amateurs.

Jug McSpaden Gives Lawson Little a Lesson

Cleveland, June 5 (AP).—Lawson Little, four-time British amateur champion and lowest qualifier for the National Open tournament, took a golf lesson today.

"I want you to show me how you hit those balls out of the sand," he said to fellow New Englander, Harold (Jug) McSpadden, who also will compete in the 72-hole tournament starting tomorrow.

They retired to a practice green, shooed spectators away, and pupil Little received his lesson.

The Pawnees led, 14 to 13, when Steve Irwin scored once and Jack Hatcher tallied twice to offset the single point taken by Bernice Abar.

Eddie Fetter, District of Columbia representative, was ruled off the track after running up more than 12 minutes in penalties. A fight between Roy Gowin, of the Pawnees, and Jack Hatcher marked the middle portion of the game.

Winners in special match races were Honey Thomas, Bernice Abar and Shirley Sachs, of Washington, and Vera McClelland and Alicia Gadias, of Chicago.

French Hurls Cubs to 3-2 Edge Over Phils

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 5—Chicago's Cubs grabbed their second straight victory from the Philadelphia Phils today, 3 to 2, behind the combined effforts of Outfielder Dominic Dallessandro and Pitcher Larry French.

Dallessandro, who hasn't been able to find his hitting stride all spring, drove in all Chicago's runs by doubling with the bases loaded in the third inning. French, who was knocked from the box in his last three starts and has complained of an ailing shoulder, weathered early Phil threats, then retired the final 14 enemy batters to face him—four of them by strikeouts.

Stan Hack's scratch, Bobby Bragan's muff of a thrown ball on an attempted force play and an intentional base on balls loaded the bases for Dallessandro and the blow that gave French the decision over Hugh Mulcahy.

The Phils outhit the Cubs, 9 to 6, including Wally Berger's homer in the fourth. But, although they bunched their hits in four consecutive innings from the second through the fifth and totaled 14 bases, the best they could do against French was 2 runs. It was French's sixth victory against four defeats.

Berger beat out a slow roller in the second to start Philadelphia to its first run. He was forced by Joe Marty, who scored as Merrill May doubled. However, May was thrown out trying to stretch his blow into a triple. Bragan followed with another double, but also was out trying for a three-bagger.

Home Laundry Ten Ties Lansburgh's

On the short end of a 5-1 count after four innings, Home Laundry softball team battled its way back to a 5-5 tie with Lansburgh's yesterday in an eight-inning Taft-Burroughs Softball League game.

Four runs in the sixth ruined a 1-hit pitching job Lansburgh's Lazear had turned in to that point. It was Stewart's homer with a pair of mates aboard which featured the inning. Lansburgh clipped a Home rally in the eighth when a double play, Lazear to Huntt to Hahn, retired the side.

Chief Bender Rues Exodus Of Young Pitchers to City

Old Phila. Pitcher Suggests 'Back to Farm' Movement

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, June 5.—You still have to keep the boys down on the farm if you expect them to become good baseball pitchers.

So believes old Chief Bender, the 56-year-old Chippewa Indian who pitched himself to fame back in the early 1900's and has been in baseball for 40 years.

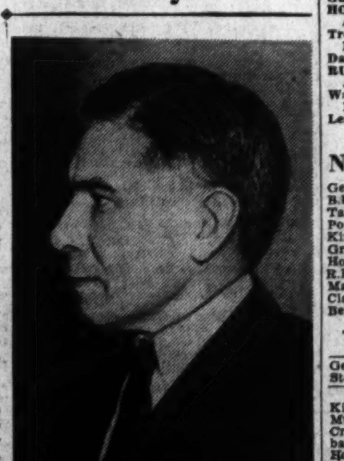

"Too many kids are going to the city these days," he lamented today. "And there they don't get that practice of throwing stones—or anything—to develop the muscles necessary to pitching and control."

A case in point, the Chief said, is young Bob Feller, the Van Meter, Iowa, farm boy, who has won eight—including a no-hit, no-run game—against two losses so far this season.

Bender, currently managing the Wilmington, Del., Interstate League club, a Philadelphia Athletics' farm, also believes the trouble with most modern pitchers is lack of control.

"That's why 75 to 90 per cent of pitchers fail to find a career in the majors," he ventured. "Morning practice to improve the pitching and hitting of a team is one of the lost arts—unless some last-place club manager happens to think of it."

Back when he was pitching for Connie Mack, Bender said, "Connie used to send a boy out to steal the ball from me to get me to stop practicing. My advice to kids is to keep throwing every day. You've got to get control."

CHIEF BENDER

"Albert" to Connie and "Chief" to the fans, Bender won 206 major league games for the A's from 1903-14 and for the Phillies in 1916-17. He reached his peak in 1910—eight years after he joined the A's, with 23 victories against five defeats.

"If everything depended on one game, I never worried," Connie once said. "I just used Albert, the greatest money 'pitch-aw' of all time."

Buddy Baer Is 1-2 Choice Over Campolo

Meet at Garden Tonight; Comiskey Favored Over Dudas

By the Associated Press

New York, June 5.—Buddy Baer, the massive Californian, is 1-2 choice to eliminate Valentine Campolo from the Argentine, as a heavyweight contender in their 12-round bout in Madison Square Garden tomorrow night.

The same price is being quoted on young Patrick Edward Comiskey to get even with his New Jersey neighbor, Steve Dudas, in their eight-round cofeature attracton.

The veteran Dudas stopped Comiskey's long-winning streak last December when he got off the floor to take an eight-round decision. Up to that time Patrick Edward had won 24 professional fights and had flattened his man in 22 of them. He injured both hands against Dudas and was on the sidelines for five months.

Baer, flushed with his seven-round knockout of Natie Mann a few weeks ago, is a powerful hitter. He probably will have a 20-pound weight advantage. Against Mann he impressed with his seventh-round rally after apparently having shot his bolt in the early rounds.

Campolo is a wild-swinging battler. Sometimes his shots land in fair territory and when they do, they hurt. He is easy to hit, but has plenty of courage, can take punishment and has a knack of continuing to get up after being floored.

University Club Ready for Action

The University Club membership is mobilizing, getting ready for action—action that will include golf, tennis, horseshows, croquet, swimming, dining and a floor show tomorrow at the Congressional Country Club.

Things start with golf, with all interested parties teeing off any time afternoon. Free beer awaits anyone who makes it at the tenth tee. There's a $2 entrance fee on the golf, a 50-cent ante per hour on the tennis, and a 75-cent fee for the swimming. The eating comes in at $2.50 per plate.

Caidon Registers Length Victory in Charles Town Feature

Jockey Kelley Rides Victor; RedWrack 2d

Winner Carries Top Weight of 120; Schley Goree Runs Third in Sprint

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., June 5.—Handicapper Freddie Burton piled 120 pounds on Caidon, a 5-year-old gelding, today and the son of Caid retaliated by winning his third purse of the meeting. The race was a test of 7 furlongs named the Washington Golf and Country Club in honor of visiting members of that organization. Caidon, ridden by Jockey W. Kelley, held a good length advantage over Mrs. M. Knieriem's Red Wrack and turned in time of 1:24 2-5, only a fraction over the track record set by Gay Amazon when the latter carried only 110 pounds.

Third in a field of eight was R. A. Bowman, jr.'s Schley Goree. Red Wrack was installed the favorite by the crowd of 7,000 and might have given Caidon more of a tussle in the stretch but for the fact that he lugged in and Jockey Beverly Hacker was forced to take up. Caidon performed in the familiar colors of Jayne Waugh.

Jockey E. Churchill, of Washington, D. C., escaped serious injury in a spectacular spill that marked the third race. Churchill had the mount on Disrupt, the favorite. Going into the first turn, the Whiskalong filly tripped and fell, apparently throwing Churchill in the path of on-coming horses. The boy rolled one way and the horse another. When the dust cleared Churchill arose and walked back to the jockey's room. Cuts on his face and a bruised shoulder were his injuries.

Getting back to the feature, Swift Air was the first to show in front, but Caidon was close to the pacemaker and moved to the front approaching the backstretch. Swift Air continued to be a threat to the far turn and then faded, turning over the No. 1 chasing position to Red Wrack. The latter came around on the outside and almost got abreast of the leader between calls.

In the stretch, Jockey Kelley went to work on Caidon and the gelding, despite his heavy weight assignment, stuck to his guns. Red Wrack then began to swerve and Jockey Hacker had to cease driving. It is doubtful, however, if Red Wrack could have won with better racing luck.

Daily double players who liked the chances of Satin Royce and Happy Miracle, the "1-3" combination, cashed a $25.40 mutuel.

HAPPY MIRACLE, saving ground while close up in early stages, came to outside and responded to drive to wear down CAUTIOUS BO in last few strides. CAUTIOUS BO drew clear going around first turn, saved ground and just failed to last. HURDY GURDY was hard ridden and met with interference when DISRUPT fell.

Daily Double, SATIN ROYCE and HAPPY MIRACLE, Paid $25.40

QUICK VINE, forwardly placed from start, wore down RISE AND SHINE to take command and held sway thereafter. NAY NAY, slow to get going, worked way up on outside, responded willingly when placed to punishment, but was held safe. RISE AND SHINE, hustled to front, set good pace, but weakened badly when the real test came. COUNORA was pinched back on inside going to first turn and failed to rally thereafter.

CAIDON went to front approaching backstretch, drew out to good advantage and held RED WRACK safe in final drive. RED WRACK, saving ground in early stages, was taken to outside nearing stretch, but lugged in and had to be taken up approaching the finish. SCHLEY GOREE ran an even race and had no excuses.

SIXTH RACE—Charles Town course. Purse, $500; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:59½. Off at once. Winner, J. Waugh's ch. g. VENDOR'S LIEN, keen factor from start, came wide for racing room entering backstretch, disposed of VANISHING HOPE and taking command won with something to spare. NOB held good position from start and closed with belated rush on outside, but never menaced winner. VANISHING HOPE set good early pace, but weakened when displaced by winner. PRINCE JOCK saved ground and had no excuses. LEAD PLEASE was well handled and quit.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $500; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:21. Off at once. Winner, J. Bosley's b. g. TROSTAR took command with the break and held on willingly under strong handling when displaced. CLYMENE, vigorously ridden and under punishment in stretch, was held safe. THE SWAGMAN moved up menacingly approaching stretch, but hung in final drive. LUCRE LUDE was taken up when in tight quarters after a half, then weakened.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:45. Off at once. Winner, F. H. CURVES, not hurried in early stages, came around horses with bold rush to improve position and disposing of TEPIN in stretch, won going away. TEPIN took command at once, set good pace, withstood challenge of CORA KAY and was under punishment at the end. CORA KAY, steadied in early racing, moved up menacingly approaching stretch, but stopped suddenly. MILRAY was held safe.

Selections at Charles Town

Dear Al:

Favorite players have been doing all right at this track. Just a shade under 41 per cent of the public choices have gotten home in front. President Al J. Boyle laid off a stock barn in the field adjoining the backstretch, where he has just had built a sporty white fence. Boyle has purchased several brood mares and is planning to buy others. Bob Cook, leading trainer at last summer's meeting here, was a visitor. I'm thinking about going out of the horse business. Getting too much fan mail. I may reduce the stable to one and keep Tarradiddle, the maiden 3-year-old. Germans has been placed on the veterinarian's list which means he can't start again until he is given the O. K. I don't want to put the jinx on the starting gate but the thing has been working so well here that it is almost unnoticed. Incidently, Hagerstown and Cumberland will have the Puett gate and the tote for their coming meetings. Art Brown gets a week off from the Capitol Theater soon and the track will put in an extra selling window for him. However, there will be no need for an extra cashier. Trainer Tom Lewis has a colt here by the name of "Charles Town." The youngster is by Vander Pool out of Topsy H. The mare was well known hereabouts during her running days and Vander Pool was the one-time 2-year-old sensation. Topsy H. won her last race while she was carrying this colt. Lewis trains for Galt Davis, Rosslyn's gift to bowling. It was raining all around this track early in the afternoon but not here. Horsemen were divided among those who wanted a fast track and those who wanted mud. I know what track superintendent Harry Erickson wanted. How'm I doing, Nora? BILL.

First race—Brainchild has had more than his share of poor racing luck. Should the track be fast today, he will be right in there knocking, and I'm going to string along. Kenner is fit and ready for the best. Royal Veil belongs with this kind and is dangerous.

Second race—He Rolls turned in a fine winning effort last out and with the added education could come back and down this better field. Bud-On and Mayfern appear to have an edge on the others. Butcher Boy would be a threat, but is a doubtful starter.

Third race—Channing seems the best suited of those scheduled to face the starter in this distance test. Olivio should improve with the change of track conditions. Last Scamp and High Aim are possibilities on the reserve list.

Fourth race—Likly Lad may have too much speed for these. Appears capable of handling the 118-pound assignment, and I'm going to string along. Stubbs has shown good form, but may be bothered by that inside post position. Time Her would be close if sent postward.

Fifth race—Molasses Julia will be prominent in a field of this sort. I believe she can take it all and will be there to give her a chance. Din and Wale Signal are fit horses and promise to battle it out if the top one makes mistakes.

Sixth race—Schley Buck gets the worst of the post positions if he gets into the race. However, he is ready, and I'm forced to string along. Bullet B. will close much ground and deserves attention. Yankee Lad is hard to guess.

Seventh race—Little Harpist was crying to run last out and had to weave between horses. This is much better company, but I'm going to take my chances. Wahcoo is a good one and will be close. Ravenhurst, in present excellent form, might down any man's horse.

Eighth race—The stable's horse, Chief Evergreen, is an inconsistent rascal. He gets a close to the rail for the start and could be the right one. Goodwine is dropping down and will be the one to beat. Worthowning was a recent winner.

Substitute races—If No. 1 is used, I'll take Navigation, Green Water and Col. Hatfield. If No. 2 is used, I'll take Wise Money, Small Change and Canrock.

Best bet—Schley Buck.

On Fishing

ACKERMAN

The passing of one, and the creation of a new Federal agency, is a mere matter of routine these days. Yet it is with extreme regret we note the discontinuance of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, for in spite of the fact there is little or no change in the personnel we have come to know so well during the last decade, and which now functions with the old Biological Survey as the Fish and Wildlife Service, it seems like the passing of an old and valued friend.

Creation of the new agency will mark another important step forward in consolidating Federal conservation activities in the Department of Interior. Both the Bureau of Fisheries and the Biological Survey, transferred last year from commerce and agriculture, merge now, at the expiration of 60 days required since the President sent reorganization plan No. 3 to Congress, as the new Fish and Wildlife Service with Dr. Ira N. Gabrielson as director.

Charles E. Jackson, serving the Bureau of Fisheries as acting commissioner since early in 1939, with W. C. Henderson, an associate chief of the Biological Survey, will serve the new service as assistant directors.

Long days spent on the water and afield are not the ultimate in enjoyment for fishing editors, as many are prone to believe. Fun, yes, but the real enjoyment comes in getting around to see old friends and in making new ones. Above all, in hearing from them, and their fishing activities from the out-of-the-way places of the world.

So our mail has come to hold the thrilling incidents of the day, and, in a way, makes up for the lessened fishing hours that year by year get fewer and fewer, as we talk more and more about our absorbing hobby.

Every day of course is not so productive as today, when our first letter, from Joseph D. Peeler, secretary of the Tuna Club of Avalon, acknowledging the receipt of marlin bands and the way of attaching them, went on to tell of the fight the Pacific Coast marlin put up when they are boated green, and that our ways of tagging could never be their way of marking fish.

Another, from Frank O'Brien, the maker of the famous Tycoon rods, fishing in the tournament at Cat Cay, while a third was from an old fishing buddy in Key West.

Next, a card from Capt. Bill Hatch, on the west coast of South America with the Lerner-American Museum of Natural History expedition for marlin and broadbill, depicting the pair of broadbills Mike Lerner took in one day off the nitrate port of Tocopilla, Chile. An achievement few men have accomplished, although this is the third pair for Lerner.

Va. Women Medalists Win At Old Point

Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Allen Get Through 1st Round In 19th Annual Play

By Barton Pattie,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Old Point Comfort, Va., June 5.—The co-medalists, Mrs. Lily Harper Martin, of Portsmouth, and Mrs. H. N. Allen, of Newport News, advanced handily through the first round of match play in the nineteenth annual Virginia Women's Golf Tournament today along with most of the other leading contenders.

Mrs. Martin, battling for her sixth State golf championship, ousted Mrs. Lillian Foster, of Hampton, 8 and 7, and Mrs. Allen defeated Mrs. Fred Evans, Langley Field, 5 and 4.

The spotlight was shifted from these two qualifying leaders, however, when Mrs. Helen P. Wise, long-hitting Langley Field contender, eliminated Mrs. E. C. Anderson, Richmond, 8 and 7, and then finished up the 18-hole round in 79, one over the Chamberlin Country Club course record which she set in 1939.

Shot Hits Tree

Mrs. Wise had two birdies and two bogeys in equaling par 37 going out to lead her opponent six-up. Her tee shot glanced off a tree at the fifteenth, where she took a six and she needed a seven to get across the water at the sixteenth. She missed a 3-foot putt on the eighteenth, which would have matched the record card.

Mrs. Grayson Dashiell, Richmond's lone remaining title hope, played brilliantly to score a 9 and 7 triumph over Mrs. Hume Peabody, highly regarded Langley Field entry.

Mrs. George Owens, of Petersburg, runner-up to Mrs. Martin in the State event at Virginia Beach last year, downed another Petersburger, Mrs. H. A. Beekhuis, 5 and 3, and Mrs. R. C. Hockaday, Newport News, remained in the honor flight with a 3 and 2 decision over Mrs. Edwin Lord, Norfolk.

Wins With Comeback

Mrs. J. C. Addington, Norfolk's ranking feminine player, scored the only back nine comeback of the day when she downed Mrs. Ora Chancellor, Richmond, 3 and 1, after trailing two down at the turn. Mrs. C. S. Hall, Amelia, had a nip and tuck strugggle with Mrs. W. W. Hamby, Roanoke, before finishing on top, 3 and 1.

Mrs. Martin meets Mrs. Hockaday, and Mrs. Dashiel engages Mrs. Owens in Thursday's quarter-finals in the upper bracket.

Matches in the other bracket will send Mrs. Allen against Mrs. Addington, and Mrs. Wise against Mrs. Hall.

Today's round was played under a torrid sun, but the tension seemed to have eased from Tuesday's qualifying battle and the scoring, on hte whole, showed improvement.

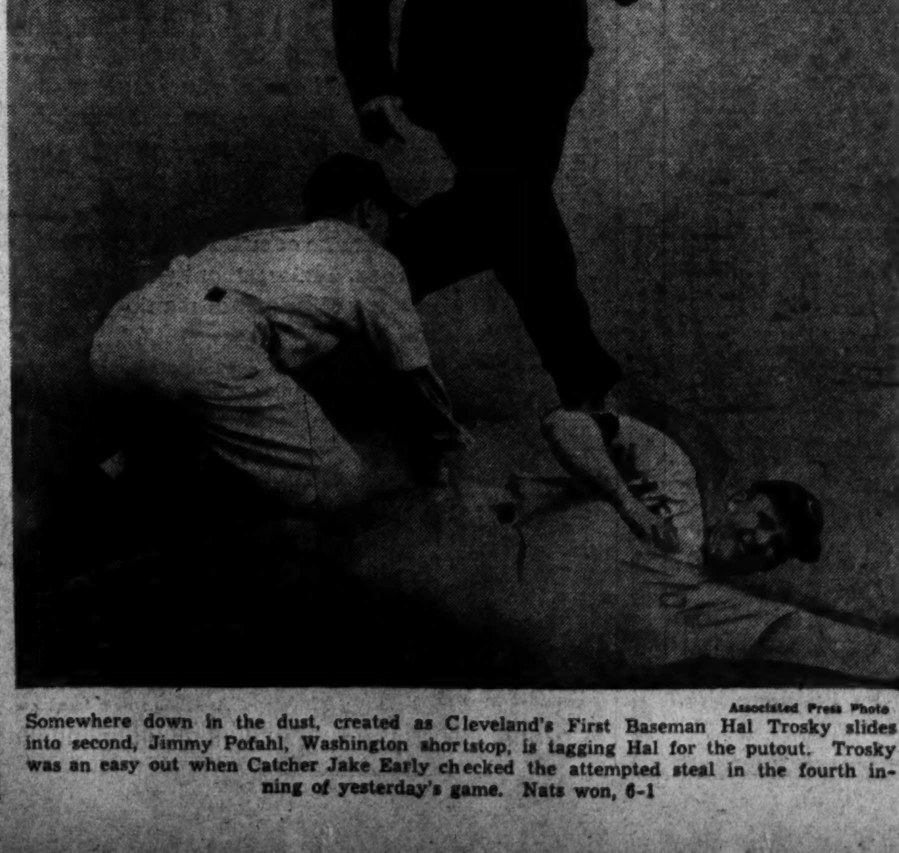

PackersClaimClub Shouldn'tBeTaxed

By the Associated Press

Green Bay Packers, Inc., operators of the National Professional Football League team of Green Bay, Wis., has told the tax appeals board it should not have to pay a Treasury claim for $5,865 of undistributed profits taxes for 1937.

Its petition contended it was a non-profit sharing organization, that any proceeds from its operations went to the Sullivan Post of the American Legion or to Green Bay charities, and that as a charitable organization it was not subject to tax.

Rally Halves Sharp Decline In Wheat List

Final Prices Display Losses of 1⅜ to 2c a Bushel

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 5.—The new German attack on the Western Front touched off another wave of selling in the grain market today, lowering prices of wheat about 3 cents a bushel and other cereals less amounts before a rally developed.

Wheat prices were the lowest since Saturday, May 18, the day before the Board of Trade fixed minimum quotations for all grains to check the drastic liquidation and sensational price collapse that accompanied the first German push on the Western Front. July wheat at one stage sold at the minimum of 78½, the first time that any wheat future has touched the minimums since they were established. All other grain futures except corn and July oats and December rye closed at the minimums, which greatly restricted trade in the other pits.

Wheat contracts at Minneapolis, durum at Duluth and Minneapolis, oats, rye, barley and flax futures, also were at the minimum prices. Kansas City wheat quotations were at the minimums at one time.

Some buying attributed to shorts and elevator interests helped to rally wheat before the close, but final prices were 1⅜ to 2 cents lower than yesterday; July, 79⅜@79½; September, 79⅞@80. These prices were 1 to almost 2 cents above the minimums. Corn closed ⅛ cent lower to ½ cent higher; July, 62½@62⅝; September, 61⅜@61½, or 3 to 3⅛ above the minimums. Oats closed unchanged to ⅛ cent lower; rye unchanged to ⅛ cent off, and lard unchanged to 5 cents lower.

Another bearish factor on grains aside from the war, lagging foreign and domestic demand, was the continuation of favorable weather. Rains were received in the Northwest and Southwest, and light rains fell in western Canada.

Following wheat, corn plunged as much as 1¾ cents at one time, but rallied sharply and closed at the best level of the day.

Commodity Prices Slump On War News

Retreat in Good Order; Average Reaches New Depth for Year

By the Associated Press

Prices came down all along the line in the big commodity futures markets on news of Hitler's latest blitzkrieg efforts.

Wool tops stood practically alone in the plus column. Buyers were apparently still influenced by Army demand for textiles.

The retreat elsewhere was in good order and losses comparatively moderate. Among the losers were copper, hides, silk, rubber, cocoa, sugar, cottonseed oil, Santos coffee and Straits tin.

The Associated Press weighted index of 35 wholesale spot commodities, based on 1926 as 100, declined to 71.27, a new low for the year, from 71.49 Tuesday.

Canadian Wheat Board Denies U. S. Storage

Ottawa, Ontario, June 5 (AP).—There is no wheat owned by the Canadian wheat board stored in the United States, according to reply tabled in the Commons today by Trade Minister J. A. Mackinnon.

Canadian wheat stored in Canada on May 24 was 261,663,967 bushels and in the United States 20,577,807.

A. T. & T. Reports Gain Of 86,900 Telephones

New York, June 5 (AP).—The principal telephone subsidiaries of the American Telephone & Telephone Co. reported a gain of 86,900 telephones in May, compared with an increase of 84,100 in the preceding month and 72,600 in May, 1939.

This brought the net gain for the first five months of 1940 to 431,300, against 354,300 in the comparable period a year ago.

Foreign Markets

London, June 5 (AP).—Initial gains were wiped out in the securities market today following news of the fresh German offensive in France. Earlier the market responded to announcement the dividend limitations bill had been abandoned. Kaffirs and oils weakened and government bonds ended unchanged to around ¼ point lower. Industrial leaders reacted to opening levels or below after a morning spurt. Losses of 1 to 2 points were general among Far Eastern stocks.

Paris—Lower prices were posted for virtually all issues traded in the bourse today. Rentes closed unchanged to 350 centimes lower. Suez Canal, however, struck against the main trend in Mediterranean issues with a 1 per cent gain. Quotations were still lacking on a number of issues, especially those with properties in war areas.

Apprehension Over Renewed Nazi Drive Reflected in Stock Drop of 1 to 4 Points; Steels and Industrials in Van of Retreat

New York, June 5.—Hitler's new drive toward the heart of France caused more than ripples of apprehension in financial quarters as well as in commodity markets. Share prices subsided 1 to 4 points on a somewhat larger volume of dealings than on Tuesday. Foreign exchange rates were narrow with trading restricted. Foreign bonds yielded in most instances, Australians touching new lows. Treasuries were steady.

The composite average of 100 key stocks listed on the big board ended with a decline of 1.03 points with steels and heavy manufacturing shares showing the widest breaks. Transfers totaled 668,240 shares. Wheat dropped 1⅜ to 2 cents a bushel, while cotton ended unchanged to 9 points lower.

Trade News Is Bright

The action of stocks demonstrated once again that actual news of fighting is the dominant factor in determining the course of prices. But for the fear of another German victory against the French, the news could have stimulated buying on a large scale. Various steel centers, notably Buffalo, reported further gains in operations and news dispatches from Paris said that very large orders for tanks and other army equipment have been placed within the last few days in the United States for French account. The Iron Age, meanwhile, related a number of instances where steel-making activities have been quickened, for normal industrial as well as national defense needs.

Steel common, maintaining its position as the second most active stock, closed at 44¾ for a net loss of 2 and Bethlehem also lost 2. Republic was off 1 and Sheet & Tube 3. In this, as well as in most other major groups, last prices were up a bit from the worst levels of the day.

General motors broke out of its narrow range of recent days with a decline of 1⅜. Chrysler lost more than 2. Packard, most active stock of the day, gained ⅛ and Studebaker, another low-priced automotive, was off ¼.

Rumors and Guesses

Resistance in the rail equipment group, where some late buying wiped out early losses and in some cases established net gains, was a reflection of rumors and guesses concerning war orders placed or about to be placed. American Brake Shoe was ahead half a point; General American Transportation rose 1½ and Westinghouse Air Brake was fractionally higher. On the other hand, American Car & Foundry issues, Pullman and some others were weak.

Selling in the utilities brought about wider fluctuations in the group than usual. Some of the preferreds, including American Power & Light issues, lost as much as 3 points. The oils were generally in lower ground, an exception being Standard Oil of New Jersey, which was in demand on account of the company's newly announced synthetic rubber process. It gained 2⅛ to close at 33½.

Bonds Are Weaker

Listed bonds moved lower today, in what is rapidly becoming the traditional reaction of our markets to news of the intensification of warfare in Europe. Foreign dollar bonds remained under pressure, with the losses ranging from 1 to 5 points. Best rated American investment media dipped only fractionally. Speculative corporate issues followed the trend of the equities department. Turnover was only $4,610,100.

Australian bonds fell 1 to 2 points to fresh lows, while Canadian bonds held around previous levels. German issues were not much affected by the booming of the heavy guns. Only one French 7 per cent bond was turned over for cash. Belgian, Danish and Norwegian issues were dull. Italians gained a little support as Premier Mussolini withheld the order for entry into the war. Latin-American bonds were weak throughout, with the well-rated Argentines leading the procession.

FDIC Cites 'Inadequate' Bank Capital

Nearly 6,000 Units Need More Funds, Agency Reports

By the Associated Press

Nearly 6,000 American banks were rated by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation yesterday as having "inadequate capital."

Without suggesting methods, the corporation implied in its annual report that these banks should raise more capital by selling stock or other means in order to protect depositors.

If these banks fail, and their capital does not cover losses, the FDIC must make good claims of depositors up to $5,000 each.

The corporation said it "believes that every bank should have a minimum net sound capital equal to at least 10 per cent of the appraised value of its assets," but that "examinations in 1939 revealed that 2,884 insured banks had net sound capital below this minimum.

"It is estimated that, in addition to the 2,884 banks mentioned above, approximately 3,000 banks have a capital below the reasonable minimum when considered in the light of the nature and quality of the assets held and other qualifying factors."

The report said that in 1939 the corporation found 10 banks which had no net sound capital at all, and 75 others which had less than 5 per cent.

More careful supervision by State and Federal examining authorities was mentioned as one method of improving the capital position of banks, but the corporation urged against placing too much responsibility on examiners.

July Cotton Firm, Later Deliveries Off 1 to 9 Points

New York, June 5 (AP).—Trade accounts bought the July cotton delivery today, holding the price unchanged, but later months lost 6 to 9 points under broadened selling.

The firm underfooting found by the spot month appeared a direct outgrowth of reports from the South that supplies of free cotton were becoming increasingly scarce.

Cotton is not coming out of the millions of bales held under Government loan, dealers explained, because of unprofitable current prices. Holders, in other words, stand to get more from the Government at present than in the open market.

At the same time, effect of the spot situation is expected by many to steady futures.

New Synthetic Rubber Used For Auto Tires

Goodrich Has Started Output; Price Seen Moderately Higher

By the Associated Press

New York, June 5.—Manufacture of the first passenger car tire made entirely of domestic materials has been started by the B. W. Goodrich Co., John L. Collyer, president, announced today to a group of industrialists, military experts and scientists.

Using a new synthetic rubber—"ameripol"—Collyer declared a product has been developed after 14 years research which is equal or superior to natural rubber, and can be processed and vulcanized like the natural product.

A plant with a daily capacity of several tons of "ameripol" will be ready in the fall.

Dr. Waldo L. Semon, who, with his assistants, was credited with the development of the synthetic product, said the basic raw material from which "ameripol" is made is petroleum.

"At which precise date Goodrich, or any other organization," said Collyer, "can go before the American public with the announcement that America need no longer depend upon natural rubber, we cannot foretell.

"These new tires will be higher in price," the Goodrich president declared. "However," he added, "with increasing production, economies may be expected which will reduce the price."

Prior to development of the Goodrich tire, use of artificial rubber was confined mainly to mechanical goods, such a belting and tank linings.

FTC Strikes Blow At Alleged 'Pool' Of Pipe Makers

By the Associated Press

The Federal Trade Commission announced yesterday that nine manufacturers of vitrified clay sewer pipe, the Southern Vitrified Pipe Association, Cincinnati, and the latter's officers had been ordered to discontinue practices alleged to be in restraint of price competition.

The commission said it had found that the respondents had deprived the Federal Government of favorable rail rates by refusing to sell on an f.o.b. mill basis, had exchanged intended price quotations on Government orders prior to opening of sealed bids, and had caused dealer customers to submit identical bids on Governmental orders.

The commission ordered the respondents to cease fixing prices, exchanging price information, quoting or selling on a dealer basis only, fixing differentials in price on sales to dealers and building contractors, restricting the quantity of vitrified clay sewer pipe to be produced by member manufacturing firms and determining what concerns should be recognized as dealers.

Today's Radio Highlights

1 p. m., WMAL—Niceties that pass for politeness in Africa, the gentilities of the Chinese and the manners of the American Indians are contrasted on "How Do You Know?" to show that manners are a matter of geography.

7:30, WJSV—Prof. Haywood J. Pearce reveals some surprising new evidence on the fate of the lost colonists of Roanoke, settlers of England's first colony in America who disappeared in 1587 without leaving a single trace.

7:30, WMAL—Christian Heurich, now in his ninety-seventy year, celebrates his seventy-fourth in the American brewery market.

7:30, WOL—David Rose and Art Tatum, the blind pianist from California, offer some more California melodies.

8, WMAL—Anniversary program of the Woodmen of the World.

8, WRC—It's gotten so that when the radio folk refer to the good old days they mean the 'twenties. Mary Martin and Dick Powell sing some of those songs which will make many of us feel much too older.

8:30, WMAL—With Rosa Pauly, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera as soloist, Reginald Stewart directs the Toronto Promenade Symphony orchestra in the first of a series of summer concerts from the Canadian city. Strauss' "Don Juan" and "Death and Transfiguration" and two songs by Mme. Pauly, "Heimliche Aufforderung" and "Caecillie," are on the broadcast portion of the program.

8:30, WRC—Rudy Vallee, Martha Raye and Colonel Stoopnagle dramatize, if that is the word, "Hiawatha."

9, WRC—John Payne of the films and Suzanne Fisher of the Metropolitan Opera are Bing Crosby's guests.

10, WOL—"But She's Different," by William Parvis, is tonight's WOL Presents. Robert Finney, Mary Ellen Huey, Gunner Jadgman, Joe Cohen, and Sidor Chichester play the leads.

10:15, WOL—Senator Claude Pepper, the Florida Democrat whose words on the war are said to have Executive backing, addressed the Mutual network.

10:30, WMAL—Talk by Wendell Willkie.

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

Listen! with Slocum

Many moons ago this portion of the Post's funny page carried a few well chosen words which attempted to prove it was tougher to be a radio actor than a stage or screen thespian. Today, there tumbled out of the vast collection of unimportant information that the C. B. S. press department sends out a story by Francis X. Bushman, which did my weary old heart good.

Francis, as Mother can tell you, was the Robert Taylor of his day, only more rugged.

Time has chiseled gently into the Bushman profile and has slid a couple of chins where once a dimple dwelt, so he had to bid that great art, the cinema, good-bye, and join the legion of actors who are giving their all for the serial dramas which are so popular on the ether.

Says Bushman, not without bias, "Profiles used to be something to get excited about. Now the public prefers a modulated voice." He then goes on to point out how the day has gone when matinee idols flung their profiles into the middle of the screen and struck a few standard poses. (F. X. evidently doesn't go to the movies much these days). "Actors today must have good voices, particularly if they are to earn their next sports coat in radio," according to Mr. Bushman.

Incidentally, you can hear Bushman modulate his tonsile over WJSV on the "Stepmother" broadcasts.

Parks Johnson and Wally Butterworth take th Columbia network's "Vox Pop" microphone to East Pittsburgh, Pa., tonight to interview engineers, technicians and their families at one of their occasional house parties. The broadcast will be on WJSV at 6:30 p. m.

During the broadcast the engineers have arranged to hide some irradiated material in the pockets of some of those present. The hiding places and the persons upon whom it is concealed, will be revealed for radio listeners by one of the most sensitive devices known—a Greiger counter.

"Orphans in Love"

Ellen Carlan has loved Peter Storm since both were children. They take refuge from a storm in the deserted old Tucker mansion and note the resemblance of Peter to Jonathan Tucker. John Abbott and his wife fear their deception 25 years ago when they abandoned the only heir at the orphanage, will be discovered. Abbott offers Peter a job in his firm. Mother Rosa at the orphanage sends Ellen to Rosalind, a famous designer who hires her as a model. The Abbotts decide Peter and Millicent would be a good match. Ellen models a bridal gown at Rosalind's fall show, which Roger Maillard attends with his sister. The handsome millionaire falls in love with Ellen. She gets her chance at dressmaking when a maid spills ink on a bridal gown the night before the wedding. Ellen finishes the substitute dress. It is accepted and Rosalind doubles Ellen's salary, promoting her to designer. On Christmas Day, Peter and Ellen return to the orphanage with gifts for everyone, then he shows Ellen the Tucker house, cleaned and decorated for the occasion. Ellen finds a letter from Paris dated 1913 in a Bible and thrusts it in her pocket.

Chapter 31

"OH, PETER! Where are you?"

Ellen slipped the letter into her pocket as she recognized the voice. Millicent Abbott had come to share their Christmas party.

Peter came up from the cellar, laden with wood and papers, at almost the same moment that Ellen descended the stairs. Millicent saw Ellen first. A fleeting disappointment darkened her eyes, but she smiled.

"Oh, hello, Miss Carlan. I thought I might find Peter here."

"Who does this look like?" He was coming around from under the stairway. "Hello, Millicent." His eyes lighted with glad surprise.

"Father told me you'd be up here today. I just couldn't resist the urge to follow you. It's been such a lovely day for a drive." She removed her gloves, started to unfasten her fur coat. She was confident, sure of herself and sure of her welcome.

It had never occurred to her to wonder whether Ellen and Peter might want to be alone. She walked into the living room, looked about curiously. "My! The place is almost civilized, Peter."

He laughed, not noticing the condescension in her tone. "Millicent can't understand how I feel about the house," he explained to Ellen. "She has no reverence for it."

"It's a pokey little matchbox," she agreed carelessly. "And cold as a tomb. I shouldn't be surprised if the last Tuckers froze to death here."

Spell Day

"Just wait until I get this fire going," Peter promised her. He laid the wood on the hearth, began crumpling up papers. "I'm tickled to death you came, Millicent. I wanted you see the house all fixed up like this."

His words spoiled part of the day's joy for Ellen. This had been their own precious secret: Millicent Abbott had no share in it. Even now she had no interest in the house.

She sank into the first chair, glanced about with half-humorous disdain. Presently she caught sight of the portrait above the fireplace: she studied it casually for a moment. Then, with easy nonchalance, she remarked:

"So that's old Jonathan." Her tone was mocking. She looked over at Peter, then back to the old portrait.

"You do resemble the old pirate, Peter. Especially about the eyes and forehead. But he's a type, I suppose. Rugged old Yankee. If we drove upstate through the old villages, we'd probably meet his counterpart in every village store."

Eyes Narrow

Ellen's eyes narrowed. At the moment she detested this disparaging young woman with her smug superiority and sophisticated contempt.

Commonplace old Yankee, was he? And what would have happened to the country without such men? Where would it be if it depended upon such self-centered and inadequate young people as Millicent Abbott and her friends?

Millicent reached in her bag for a cigarette, tapped it on its silver case with elaborate grace which accentuated her long, tapering fingers. She must have felt Ellen's disapproving eyes upon her, for presently she looked up, smiled disarmingly.

"And how are you these days, Miss Carlan?"

"Very well, thank you." Ellen's tone was crisp. "I've been busy."

Millicent laughed in a particularly knowing fashion. "You don't have to tell us that, my dear. We manage to keep up with all the current gossip. Don't we, Peter?"

"Don't we what, Millicent?" He was on his knees, paying more attention to the fire than to what she was saying.

"Don't we know all about Miss Carlan—and her existing romance?"

Quick Flush

A quick flush stained Ellen's cheeks. Peter sat up abruptly.

"What's this?" he demanded, looking at Ellen. "What have you been keeping from me?"

Millicent answered for her. "You would know, Peter, if you'd bother to read the newspapers. The most popular twosome of the season is our little friend Ellen and Roger Maillard."

"Who is he?" He was sitting on his heels, staring at Ellen with a bold amazement.

"Who is Roger Maillard? My dear! He's just about the most important young man in New York. Every debutante of the season has had her cap set for him. Miss Carlan stepped in and snatched him from under their very noses."

Ellen Frowns

Ellen frowned. Peter's eyes still questioned her, and she wanted to shout her denial. But she wouldn't. She would not give that much importance to Millicent's silly gossip.

She shrugged, as carelessly as she could in the heat of her anger. "That's ridiculous!" she declared. She knew the words were inadequate.

Millicent laughed again. "Don't be so embarrased, my dear! You're the envy of every girl in New York. Look at her blush, Peter! Isn't she the child?" She played upon the words, beating Ellen down to the dull insignificance of a 2-year-old. . .

"I do wish you'd drive home with me, Peter." Millicent turned the roadster through the wide gates of St. Peter's.

He hesitated. "I'd like to——"

Ellen sensing his indecision, came to the rescue. "Go along, Peter, if you want to. I'll explain to everybody." Why try to hold him against his will.

He accepted the suggestion eagerly. "I'll just stop a minute and say good-bye. Will you wait, Millicent?"

"Don't be long. I'm half frozen . . ."

Inside, the sisters and the children did not conceal their delight to have them back so soon. The boys already needed advice on the radio set.

Father Joseph was hoping for another chat. It was not easy to break away, but Peter hid his impatience.

Gives Invitation

"If you wish, Peter," Mother Rosa offered graciously, "you may ask the young lady in. We should be delighted to have her remain for tea."

He was given no chance to reply. Two short blasts of the roadster's horn summoned him imperatively. They said as plainly as words: "Never mind those people!"

Mother Rosa frowned unconsciously. Young ladies in her estimation. did not toot horns at young men. But she spared Peter the embarrassment of apologizing further.

"Run along then," she urged him kindly. "And come up whenever you have the time. We always like to see you, Peter."

He breathed easier once he was outside.

"For heaven's sake, what kept you?" Millicent demanded pettishly.

"It takes time to say Merry Christmas all around." He got into the car beside her, slammed the door. He tried not to see eager faces pressed against the window panes.

"I should think you'd never want to see that place again. It's as bad as a jail."

He didn't bother to reply, knowing that he could never expect her to understand.

They drove over to the parkway, followed the course of the river down to the city. Darkness had already fallen, and the spirit of Christmas was more strongly woven into the night air.

There was no snow on the ground, but the air was crisp and cold, and the sky brilliantly alive with stars which seemed to spell out the message of peace on earth.

To Be Continued.

8-Hour Drive for Women Strikes Snag

A controversy that developed over the Commissioners' proposals to strengthen the women's 8-hour law yesterday indicated that the legislation would not be adopted by Congress at this session.

Because all witnesses could not be heard during a morning session of the Judiciary subcommittee of the House District Committee, Chairman McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, said other hearings will be held next week.

As the final District day probably will be held next Monday, the bill, even if approved by the subcommittee, cannot be called up subsequently in the House unless all objections have been removed.

The Washington Board of Trade and employer groups attacked the bill, while members of the Minimum Wage Board and spokesmen for employes defended it.

Mrs. William Kittle, chairman of the Minimum Wage Board, said the amendments are necessary to remove "injustice, discrepancies, and faults" in the existing law. She pointed out that the bill is designed to include to extend the 8-hour law to women who work in private establishments for less than $35 a week except graduate nurses, domestics, agricultural workers, and resident managers of apartment houses.

The amendments give the Minimum Wage Board more power and a method of enforcing the law, she added.

The bill was indorsed by Mrs. Ethel Beebe, upon behalf of beauty shop employes; Mrs. Harold Stone, of the Voteless League of Women Voters, and Arthur L. Schoenthal, of the Minimum Wage Board.
